PREFACE.

FROM about the year 1850 to 1854, considerable effort was made to collect and arrange in tabular order the descendants of Thomas Trowbridge in this country, who came from Taunton, Somersetshire, England, to Dorchester, Mass., in 1636, and thence to New Haven soon after, for publication. Foremost among those who interested themselves in this enterprise were Thomas R. Trowbridge, of New Haven, Philo M. Trowbridge, of Woodbury, Conn., and Otis Trowbridge, of Newton, Mass. As the result of their efforts, most of the descendants of Thomas, the oldest son of the settler, in the male line, were collected by the Rev. Wm. S. Porter, he being employed for that purpose by Mr. Thomas R. Trowbridge, of New Haven. Many of the descendants of William Trowbridge, the second son of the settler, were collected by Deacon Philo M. Trowbridge: and of the descendants of Deacon James Trowbridge, the youngest son, several hundred were collected and printed in a pamphlet of over thirty pages, in 1854. Here the matter rested, until in the summer of 1869, when Mr. Thomas R. Trowbridge employed the author (Mr. Porter having deceased,) to take the materials collected and gather up such other records and facts as might be found, and prepare a volume for publication. Accordingly, the writer issued circulars to all of the connections whose residences were known, and has written several hundred letters and visited the most important localities where the earlier members of the families resided, and collected what could be found in town, parish, church and probate records, burial grounds and family records. The list of descendants has been very much extended by tracing the female branches to the third, and, in some instances, to the fourth generation, and collecting all the younger members of the family born since 1854.

While entire accuracy has been aimed at, and while I have avoided all statements of facts or dates not based on good evidence, yet undoubtedly some errors may be found, owing to the fact that often discrepancies occur between dates furnished by different members of the same family, and also between different family records, as between family and town records and ecclesiastical and probate records. In all these cases of discrepancies I have acted according to the best of my judgment. Some families, it is to be regretted, are not as fully given as desirable, owing to indifference and backwardness in responding to inquiries. As a general rule, however, the families addressed have taken a lively interest in the enterprise, and promptly furnished their records, as over four hundred received letters testify. To name all who have rendered essential service in furnishing materials for the work, would occupy an unreasonable amount of space. Errors, of course, are to be expected in a work where so many dates and figures occur, yet, with few exceptions, we believe an accurate record has been given.

The author has endeavored to make the work as free from intricacies as possible. The descendants of each of the three children of the first settler are distinctly traced according to their generations, and all are numbered from the beginning. The marginal numbers give each descendant his place in the order of descent, and the several head numbers in the middle of the pages, the marriages of such as have entered the family relation, and, as far as possible, the names of their respective partners, with their dates of marriage, and the decease of those who have passed off the stage.

A full Index of the Christian names of all whose surname is Trowbridge, is furnished, the number of the individual being in the left hand column, and the date of birth, where ascertained, on the right; also an Index of descendants bearing other names than Trowbridge, with numbers and dates to correspond; and also a list of those who have married into the Trowbridge family, with the numbers of their respective partners in the left hand column, and the date of marriage on the right.

The author, in concluding the work, hopes it will be found acceptable to the numerous members of the family, to whom it is respectfully inscribed.

FREDERICK W. CHAPMAN.

TROWBRIDGE FAMILY.

EXTRACTS FROM ENGLISH RECORDS REFERRING TO THE TROWBRIDGE FAMILY.

The very ancient family of Trowbridge* derives its name from its ancient inheritance, Trowbridge, in the Parish of Crediton, in Devonshire, where it resided for many centuries, and which was the property of Peter de Trowbridge, in the reign of Edward the First. This Barton was sold by the Trowbridge family, about the year 1720, to Samuel Strode, Esquire, whose son conveyed it to Giles Yard, Esquire. It now (1853) belongs to Miss Elizabeth Yard, one of his daughters and co-heiresses. Trowbridge house is occupied by her uncle, John Yard, Esquire.

The Manor of Loxbear, in the Parish of Loxbear, in Devonshire, belonged, in the reign of Henry the Second, to the ancient family of Avenell, whose co-heiresses brought it, in the time of Henry the Sixth, to Trowbridge and Richards. It seems to have been vested, eventually, in the former, of whose descendants it was purchased, about the year 1600, by Daniel Scudmore, Esquire.

Pedigree of Trowbridge, of Trowbridge, in the Parish of Crediton, in Devonshire, from the Herald's Visitation in the years 1565 and 1620.

*The name in the earlier records is variously spelled thus: Trobridge, Trounbridge, Trowbridge, Throwbridge, Trobblebridge, Strobridge and Strawbridge. The mode of spelling now generally adopted is Trowbridge.

Among the records, late of the Queen's remembrance, preserved in the branch public Record Office, Carleton Ride, is an inquisition post mortem, on Thomas Trowbridge of Devonshire. By this it appears that he died, March 15, 1570, seized of Loxbear, Tiverton and Calwodley in Washfield, Bycott and Easturn. William, his son and heir, was eight years old at the time of his father's death.

ABSTRACTS OF WILLS PROVED AT THE CONSISTORY COURT, AT EXETER, IN DEVONSHIRE.

John Trowbridge, of Riston; will dated 1539; wife, Margaret; brothers, Robert and John. Margaret Trowbridge, of Ryston, widow, speaks of her nephew, John [torn] Margaret, [torn]. Residue of property to Robert Tr [torn].

Proved in 1748.

A younger branch of the Devonshire family of Trowbridge, seems to have settled in Somersetshire, and we find them at *Taunton in that county as early as 1541. From this branch sprang the Trowbridges of America. That the Taunton family were of that of Devonshire is sufficiently proved by the arms being precisely the same as seen in the stained glass window in the chancel of St. James Church, quartered with those of Halliday.

Viz: Arms—First and fourth sable, three Knight's helmets, proper for Halliday.

Second and third—or on a bridge of three arches, in fesse, gules, masonry sable, three streams, transfluent proper, a tower of the second thereon, a fane argent, for Trowbridge.

Crest—A demi-lion rampant, or holding a fowl anchor, sable.

ABSTRACTS OF WILLS PROVED AT TAUNTON, SOMERSETSHIRE.

The wills commence about the year 1538. The indexes are very imperfect, and there are many chasms in the wills. Several are so much eaten by insects and injured by dampness as to be almost illegible.

SIR WILLIAM TROWBRIDGE,

OF RYSTON.

In the name of God, Amen. In the year of our Lord God, 1562, and on the 6th day of June, I, Sir William Trowbridge, Curate, Ruishton, of good mind and perfect remembrance, make this my last will and testament, in this manner following:

FIRST, I give my soul to Almighty God, and my body to be buried in Christian burial, at my parishioners' pleasure.

Item—I give to the cathedral church of Wells, 4d, and to the poor 12d, and I give to the children of John Trowbridge, my brother, to every and each of them, 10s.

Item—I give to Ruishton Church 3s. 4d.

Item—I give to Alice Lane, my sister-in-law, 3s. 4d. The rest of my goods, not given nor bequeathed, to Dorothy White, the wife of John White, whom I make my sole executrix.

Witness hereto,

{ JOHN ROSEWELL, Clerk.
 { STEPHEN MATHER,
 { JOHN ZEZAR.

Proved, July 4, 1562.

WILLIAM TROWBRIDGE,

OF TAUNTON.

In the name of God, Amen, in the year of our Lord God, 1575, and on the 28th day of May, I, William Trowbridge, of the Parish of St. James, by Taunton, being of perfect mind and memory, do make this my last will and testament.

FIRST, I give my soul to Almighty God, and my body to be buried in the Church or Churchyard of St. James aforesaid.

Item—I give all my goods, moveable and immoveable, debts, and others, that were and is due unto me, unto my four children, viz: To William, Alice, Julian and Elizabeth Trowbridge, whom I make my whole and joint executors. And, if it happen any of these die, the goods to be divided among the rest of my said children, that still happen to be alive, and to the bringing up my said children. And my will is that my father-in-law, John Spring, and my brother, Thomas Trowbridge, shall be my overseers, to and for the behalf of my aforesaid children, during their minority, and for the bringing up of them. And the residue that is and shall be left, over and above the premises, my will is that it shall be divided, amongst my aforesaid children, in equal portions. And for their pains I give to John Spring, my best cloak, and unto my brother Thomas Trowbridge, my best Spanish leather jerkin. In witness of this to be of truth, is John Andrie and Richard Berrie with others.

Proved, June 26, 1575.

JOHN TROWBRIDGE,

OF BRUSHFORD.

In the name of God, Amen. EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER BY HENRY TROWBRIDGE, OF THE FIRM OF HENRY TROWBRIDGE'S SONS, NEW HAVEN, TO HIS OLDEST BROTHER THOMAS OF THE SAME FIRM:

London, January 20, 1860.

I visited Taunton yesterday, etc.

Immediately on arriving there I went to "St. Mary Magdalen," and sent for the sexton, and inquired for the celebrated tablet, the inscription of which you know. I asked him if he could tell me where our revered ancestor was buried. He could not; for in the restoration of the church, all the vaults were filled up and paved over. The original slabs over the graves were, except as taken care of by descendants, all worked over and placed in the pavement of the side aisles, and nearly all so worn down by passing over them, as to be entirely defaced. On one, the letters "TROW," on one side, was distinct, but nothing else could be deciphered. The slab appeared to have been cut in two, or reduced to conform in width to the rest of the pavement. I think this was our ancestor's slab, but there is nothing certain about it. After spending as long a time in and about the church as was desirable, I inquired about the wardens, and where the active or leading one lived. I found he was the editor of the Taunton paper, and not far off, and so went in search of him, and luckily found him at home, and sent up my card. He soon made his appearance. I immediately told him I was a direct descendant from Thomas Trowbridge, whose good deed was recorded in stone in St. Mary's. He seemed much pleased to see me, and at once spoke of the charity as conferring a blessing annually upon the poor. I, of course, was all anxiety to know about it, so he brought out the book headed Trowbridge Charity, in which the annual receipt and distribution is recorded and balanced. There has never, from the day of Thomas' death, been a failure to distribute the annual income according to the spirit of the will, but not always to the letter. For a long time the shillings were given to the poor without calling them together in the church, as the will directs; but Mr. May, the present acting warden, and for many years past, a man of about your age and size, and with just your love and veneration for the past, determined to restore the former usage in exact conformity to the will, and did so; so that now, on St. Thomas' day, "the Poorest, Oldest, most Honest and Impotent poor" of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene are assembled at the church, except such as could not, when divine service is held and a sermon preached to them, previous to which each one receives a shilling ticket, and at the close receives from the Rector a shilling on presenting the ticket, "when the donor's name is mentioned, and the poor put in mind to thank God for his mercy." The day is wholly given up to this distribution. Mr. May says it is a most pleasing duty, and would have gratified me beyond measure to have witnessed the last distribution, 21st of December, and regretted exceedingly he did not know I was so near, so as to have invited me to it. He says there are always more applicants than the fund will supply. Many were eighty years of age, hardly any below fifty, who participate. Any surplus remaining over is given in loaves of bread to the most deserving, in addition to the shilling piece. But a still greater good results from the charity than the temporal relief. It is that these aged and impotent poor who are prevented from attending church, perhaps for the whole year, on this day hear the Gospel preached, expressly adapted to them, and under the most impressive circumstances, as it comes with the charity which warms and feeds them. The charity is one of five of a similar character, but is the largest, and yielding now £20. Of course I was all anxiety to see the land, which I learned was about a mile from town. So Mr. May, leaving the Rector with whom he was engaged, got into the carriage and drove with me to it. The day was beautiful, a bright sun shining, and as we halted in front of the lot, I thought I never saw so fair a field. The largest of the two fields contains five acres, and very similar to our large lot on the hill, except it rises gently from the highway, instead of receding. It is surrounded with a hawthorn hedge, one half in grass and half in cultivation. From an old oak in the center of the lot, I gathered some dry leaves which entwined it, one of which I send you. The oak is old enough to have sheltered our progenitor from the noon day sun, as he walked over his beautiful field. From the center I cut a small x Sod, which I have in a box, and will endeavor to carry safe to you, so that there may be a marriage of the lands of the Thomas of 1614 and the Thomas of 1860. The other lot is separated from the one first visited by a strip of land, contains one acre, also lying on the highway. Both are precisely as they were when the will was made in 1614, in bounds and meters.

Is it not strange that a charity founded by will, more than two hundred and forty-gve years ago, at that time so insignificant, should have continued, unimpaired, and at this day shedding a fourfold blessing upon the poor, and for that space of time the land remained in the same use as when the donor lived? I could not but think, as the warden described the joy of the poor in listening to the religious services, and afterwards, with tears, receiving their share of the good man's bestowment, that in him his descendants had been blessed. Mr. May said he was glad to have a descendant to render his account to, and made a copy of his last account, 1858. (That of 1859 was not closed in the parish book.) I send you a copy of it:

Mr. May said the charge for tickets only occurred once in several years. It is for the shilling ticket given to the poor before the service, which they present at the close for the shilling. By the number you may judge of the number of applicants. I have run hastily over the items, but have given you enough to show you that your honored ancestor's will has been faithfully carried out, and will be for centuries to come, thereby showing how much encouragement there is for us all to leave a blessing upon unborn generations.

Trowbridge Family in America.

FIRST GENERATION.

1.

THOMAS TROWBRIDGE, the common ancestor of the Trowbridges in America, emigrated from Taunton, Somersetshire, England, to this country as early as 1636, as Mrs. Trowbridge joined the church that year, and not improbably as early as 1634, and located at Dorchester, Mass. Thomas Jeffry, an intimate friend of his, appears on the records of that town in 1634, from the same English locality. Mr. Trowbridge's youngest son was born there in 1636, and baptized in 1638. In an assignment of land, June 2, 1634, recorded in the First Volume of the Dorchester Records, is the following entry: "Thomas Jeffrey to have the lot which was Mr. Eggleston's, by Mr. Hartshorn's." Page 14, Vol. 1, April 15, 1635. "It is ordered that Mr. Newbury and Mr. Wolcott shall have power to lay out a yard for Thomas Jeffrey, where they shall think fit, near Goodman Randalls; if so be, he use the same for a yard." In the same vol., page 40, January 2, 1637, is the following entry: "It is ordered that the parties underwritten shall have each of them satisfaction in lieu of the calves' pasture, from the burying place towards John Phillips, Mr. Trobridge, 1 acre." Same date, "It is ordered that Mr. Trobridge have two acres of marsh, in Mr. Ludlow's neck, where it is out of propriety." Again, vol. 1, page 44, March 18, 1637, "The proportion which each man is to have in the neck, according to estate and number of persons, Mr. Trobridge, 7 acres, 1 rood, 20 rods." "The proportion of town pasture and other lands this side the river, 7 acres, 1 rood, 20 rods." The year after the foregoing assignments of land the following entries occur in the Dorchester Records, page 56 of vol. 1: "It is ordered that Mr. Clark have liberty to take in four rods of land, next his pale, towards the meeting house, which is near the barn that was lately Mr. Trowbridge's." Page 63, vol. 1, October 31, 1638, "It is ordered that Mr. Jones shall have one acre of land, near his own, in lieu of an acre which he bought of Mr. Trowbridge, which was appointed him." He, undoubtedly, removed the latter part of the same year, or early in 1639, to New Haven, with the early settlers there, as did also his friend Jeffry. He appears to have spent but little time in this country, but continued his traffick, making voyages between Barbadoes and England. His name does not appear at the organization of the Church or Body Politic of New Haven, in 1639. The evidence of his residence there is the fact that he owned a house and lot, and his three sons were there, under the care of his servant or steward, Henry Gibbons, who appears to have given but little attention to his master's affairs, or children; for, as early as November, 1641, Mr. Trowbridge's property was attached for the payment of rates and debts. In November, 1642, he had cattle going at large. In 1643 he is recorded among the planters, with a family of five—himself, wife and three sons, and rated as a basis for taxation and distribution of lands belonging to the proprietors, at £500. Governor Eaton was rated at £3,000, and nine other individuals at £1,000 each. In February, 1644, Mr. Cheever was allowed £4 3s. 6d. for teaching Mr. Trowbridge's children. He returned probably the latter part of that year to England, leaving his "three sons, houses, goods, lots, estates and chattels, in trust, with Gibbons," as aforesaid, and never came back to America. In consequence of Gibbons' neglect of the trust confided to him, "Sergeant Thomas Jeffries took these three sons to educate and bring up in the fear of the Lord, and, when Mr. Trowbridge comes back, will leave it with the court to determine what is equal for it." On December 8, 1645, in consequence of the remissness of Gibbons, Mr. Trowbridge's estate was attached to satisfy creditors, and Mr. Evance took the house, which was going to decay, at £100, and agreed with the creditors and asked for the cellar. In October, 1647, Mr. Evance sold Henry Gibbons Mr. Trowbridge's lot, at West River, and in May, 1648, Gibbons accepted £10 on a debt of £20, claimed as due, as his charges were not well substantiated. Affairs remained thus until the sons came of age. Mr. Trowbridge wrote often from England to his sons and the authorities of New Haven to bring Gibbons to an account for his breach of trust. He finally, on January 14, 1664, sent to his three sons a power of attorney to recover his property from Gibbons, or wherever found, to be retained, and equally divided between them. (vide Appendix C,) and bring the said

Gibbons to account and punishment. As matters were found, a settlement could not easily be effected before Mr. Trowbridge's death, which took place at Taunton, February 7, 1672. In 1680, Gibbons, for "sundry good causes best known to myself," made over to Thomas Trowbridge, the eldest son, his house and lot, and sundry other property, including "the bed and bolster I lie on." Gibbons died in 1686, and as his brother, William Gibbons, refused to take out letters of administration, said Thomas Trowbridge was appointed administrator; and as said Henry Gibbons had no children, the matter was concluded. The sons, after attaining their majority, became men of influence, and acquired large estates.

We have, unfortunately, no definite knowledge of Mrs. Trowbridge, having no record of her maiden name, or of the date of her marriage or death. Her decease, probably, occurred before the return of her husband to England.

they employed a man, by the name of Fitzgerald, to teach them the manual exercise &c., and met for that purpose in Mr. Trowbridge's parlor, which, for a time, was changed into a drill-room. He was at the battle of Brooklyn, where he and most of his company were taken prisoners. He was a prisoner nearly two years, a part of the time on Long Island, and the remainder in the "Old Sugar House," in Liberty street, which was removed but a few years ago. It was his unwillingness to yield to the wishes of his captors that caused him to be detained so long a prisoner, as an officer of equal rank was frequently offered in exchange. The British demanded that he should not again take up arms against them, a consideration to which he would not agree. On the contrary, he told them that as soon as he should get his liberty, he would "be at them again." His imprisonment was much easier than it would have been had not his wife sold her plate, and found means to forward him the money to Long Island, with which he purchased many privileges that were denied to other prisoners. Upon his release he returned to New Haven, and after waiting some time for a major's commission, which had been promised him, he became impatient, repaired to Boston, and taking out letters of marque, commenced a warrior's life upon the sea. After remaining in this calling awhile, he again returned to New Haven. A company of citizens had fitted out a vessel for the West Indies, which was upon the point of sailing when the British cruisers made their appearance. The vessel was taken above the bridge, and shot fired at her, in order to sink her, and thereby prevent her falling into the enemy's hands, when, by some accident, she took fire and burnt to the water's edge. The hull was soon after raised, built into a brig, and fitted out for a trading voyage to Holland, and Mr. Trowbridge put in command. She was well armed, and took several prizes. She made two voyages to Amsterdam in the most exciting period in the war, when the ocean was covered with British cruisers, in search of French, Spanish, Dutch and American vessels. The name of this little vessel was The Fire Brand, from the circumstance of her having been built from a burned hull."

The following anecdote of Mr. Trowbridge, strongly illustrates his firmness and decision of character:—

"Before the war Trowbridge and Arnold had some account together, the settlement of which led to a dispute. They parted, Arnold saying, "You meet me to-morrow morning at — o'clock, (naming the hour) and we will settle it." Mr. Trowbridge supposed him to be joking, and thought no more of it. Early the next morning he was called from his bed by two gentlemen, who requested to see him on particular business, and when informed that Arnold had repaired to the spot designated by him the day previous, he was much surprised, but expressed his determination to meet. Nor were entreaties to dissuade him from it of any avail. Upon repairing to the swamp, just west of the present residence of Dr. Totten, he found Arnold waiting for him. He advanced towards him, when Arnold drew two pistols, and told him to choose one of them. He was much surprised, but not frightened, and without giving time to Arnold to guard himself, rushed upon him and wrenched both pistols from him, throwing them into the creek, and told him to go home; an order which he was not long in performing."

He died December 14, 1799, aged 52.

During the revolutionary War—at the time of the capture of New Haven—the British sacked his house and destroyed his furniture, and when the house was repaired bullets were found in the ceiling.

CAPTAIN ROSEWELL TROWBRIDGE, son of Newman and Rebeccah Cables Trowbridge, born April 29, 1784, married, January 6, 1813, Nancy Hayes, daughter of Ezekiel Hayes. He was a mariner, and lived in a cottage in Meadow street.

“ While pursuing his vocation as captain during the war of 1812, on a voyage from New Haven to St. Bartholomew, then a neutral port, in the West Indies, some four days after sailing from New Haven, was captured by a British vessel of war, on board of which was the admiral of the fleet. Captain T. was ordered on board of the frigate with his papers. His vessel was laden with a general assortment of American produce and a deck load of oxen and sheep. The admiral, on ascertaining Captain T.’s name, claimed that he was a British subject, but, on being assured that he was born in America, he did not press his claim in that respect; but from the fact of his name being the same as that of the old admiral, with whom he had formerly sailed and fought under, he treated him very kindly, and although he would have been justified in making his vessel and cargo a lawful prize, he paid him, liberally, for all his stock and what produce he took, which he transferred to his own ship, and when Captain Trowbridge, finally, separated from him, sent a boat loaded with delicacies and many things valuable as a token of his respect. Captain Trowbridge, immediately, sailed for New Haven, where he arrived in eight days after leaving the post, to the surprise and ill forbodings of his friends, they supposing he had lost everything by capture. Captain T. was a universal favorite with all who made his acquaintance at home or abroad. In his long experience as a sea-faring man, many incidents occurred which are interesting to his friends. At one time he had, safely, arrived with a valuable cargo at the Island of Guadaloupe. On the night of his arrival a violent hurricane arose, which destroyed a large portion of the town, and drove every vessel to sea or on to the shore, and there was a great loss of life among the seamen. He early, anticipating the gale, put to sea, but soon after his vessel was capsized, and for a long time remained thus, but finally righted with the loss of her masts and most of her rigging and spars. After the gale abated, he discovered that he was near the Island of St. Domingo, which he soon after reached. For months he had to remain there without being able to communicate with his friends. Nearly all of his crew, which had escaped death by the gale, died of yellow fever, but Captain T., by his skill and perseverance, made new masts and so fitted up his vessel as to enable him to sail for New Haven, where he arrived, after six months' absence, and his return was, to his friends and family, a cause of great rejoicing, as he was supposed to have been lost in the hurricane."

He died January 4, 1844, aged 60. Mrs. Nancy Trowbridge died August 30, 1857.

263.

HENRY TROWBRIDGE, son of Rutherford and Dorcas (Hitchcock) Trowbridge, born July 30, 1781. At the age of 18 years, in common with a large number of New Haven lads at that time, turned his attention to the sea. Fabulous accounts were current of the various customs of foreign countries, and there was an almost universal desire, on the part of the boys, to visit those countries. To become a seaman and command a vessel was a laudable ambition. Just at that time a ship was fitting out for the Pacific Ocean on a sealing voyage. Having obtained permission of his father for the voyage, he made application for a situation on board the ship. He was successful. It was no easy thing to obtain a situation on one of those voyages. In due time the ship was ready. His father had such confidence in his son, that he gave him what ready money he had (which was scarce in the family at that time), about $1000 in specie, to invest in China, where the ship was eventually to proceed. Embarking on board, September 17, 1799, his career commenced in the ship Betsey, William Howell, master, for the Pacific Ocean and China. Captain Howell was a man that felt responsibility for those under his command, and immediately commenced a school on board of the ship. The boys were all expected to attend to their studies as a part of their duties on ship board. Henry was acquainted with arithmetic, and soon made such proficiency in navigation, that, by the time the ship arrived off Cape Horn, he could work his lunar observation as speedily as the captain. It was customary, at that date, to serve out grog to all on board. Henry used none, but drawing his regular rations, he soon had a large supply, and by furnishing it to the old sailors, they gave him in return instruction in sailor's work, as splicing, knotting, reefing, etc. Thus, in a few months, he was well instructed in all the duties on board, and could take his regular trick at the wheel. The crew was to seal at Massafuero, the ship lying off and on, there being no anchorage at the island. On one of the boat's trips to the shore she capsized, and of the four boys who manned her, three were drowned. Young Henry alone was saved by swimming nearly two miles to the island. After several months at the island, 110,000 fur seal skins had been put on board, and the ship sailed for Canton, where the skins were to be disposed of (visiting the Sandwich Islands, where they dare not anchor for fear of the natives) for supplies. The vessel lay off and on for several days. The king came on board, and supplied provisions in exchange for such articles as were required on the island. The king was so unsophisticated that he sat flat on the deck and took his sea biscuit and cup of molasses. This was about twenty years after the murder of Captain Cook at the same island. After supplying the ship the voyage was continued to Canton. Studies were continued on this passage again. On arriving at the anchorage, Captain Howell sent for Henry to come to the cabin. This was a place unknown and unvisited during the entire voyage. What was wanted of him he could not imagine; but soon Captain Howell inquired, "How would you like to go up to Canton with me?" Captain Howell, as was customary at that time, was to take a factory and dispose of his cargo, and buy a cargo of tea, etc., for a return voyage. Henry, not knowing what position he was to occupy, said he preferred to remain in the ship. Said the captain, "I have noticed your good conduct and sobriety on board, and your acquaintance with mathematics, and I want a clerk to assist me in taking an account of the cargoes, and keeping the books." Henry readily saw that this was such duty as would suit, and he eagerly accepted the offer, and he saw the advantage it would give him for investing his father's money. The captain told him to get ready to go with him. He did not delay. He was shortly ready, and taking his usual place at the oar, the captain addressed him,— "Mr. Trowbridge, come aft, you will let a sailor take the oar." This was done some 15 or 20 miles below Canton, at Macao, ships not being permitted to approach nearer to the city. Arriving at Canton, he was installed as Clerk of the Factory. This was the beginning of his life as a merchant, and which he never lost sight of in after years. The cargo was disposed of; a return cargo procured, and sent with the ship. During his residence at Canton he determined to get within the walls of the city. Foreigners had never been permitted there up to that time. Filling his pockets with the small currency of the country, he went up to the gates, and at the time they were opened he, with another young man of his own age, belonging to another factory, rushed in and up the principal street. Soon there was a great out-cry in the unintelligible language of the country, and immense throngs of Chinese blocked up the way, front and rear. They saw they could not progress farther, nor could they get back; but by use of their money, throwing handfuls as far as possible, and in the scramble for it, gradually retreating, they got out safe. This was in 1801, and about as early as any foreigners had got into the city. After the ship was loaded the captain, with Henry, returned on board; the mate of the ship immediately saluted Henry, by saying, "Off with those shore duds, and resume duty as a sailor." This was done;—to hear on board that ship was to obey. Stowing his adventure in his berth, in the fore-castle, he slept on top of his chest for the remainder of the voyage; and that chest is now preserved as an heir-loom in the family. On the passage home the ship struck a rock, in the Straits of Malacca, and injured her rudder, so that it was necessary to remain there to repair. During this time excursions were made to Malacca for water, and after several hair-breadth escapes from the natives, the water was procured, and the ship sailed for New York; arriving safely, making a grand voyage, the adventure of Henry resulting in the doubling of his money invested in Canton. On the return of the ship his services were wanted as first officer of a West Indiaman. Making several voyages, he accumulated sufficient in three years to purchase a small sloop in Connecticut River; and fitting her up as a schooner, with the assistance of a Mr. Morris, who was interested in the voyage, loaded her for the West Indies; took charge of her as captain, and sailed for Barbadoes, as a market, with forty oxen on deck. Just before the vessel was ready for sea he was taken sick; but seeing ruin before him if the voyage was broken up, he was carried on board on a mat-trass, and the vessel sailed. After a somewhat lengthy passage, arriving at Barbadoes, he learned that Miranda's expedition was fitting out at Trinidad for the Spanish Main, and thinking that they would require his cattle, he sailed at once, and arriving just in time, sold them for a large price, for the expedition, and the rest of his cargo for a round sum; loaded a return cargo of sugar and molasses, and bringing more Spanish dollars home than his outward cargo cost, he arrived safe, making a great voyage. He then established himself in business, employing the vessel in the West India trade. He increased this West India business from time to time, and founding the House of H. Trowbridge and Son; H. Trowbridge, Sons and Dwight,—and afterwards H. Trowbridge and Sons. And at his death, his sons, in memory of their father, continued it under the name of Henry Trowbridge Sons, in the same business.

Henry Trowbridge married Harriet Hayes, daughter of *Ezekiel and Mary (Hemmingway) Hayes, January 1, 1806, by whom he had thirteen children. He died October 7, 1849, aged 70. Mrs. Harriet Trowbridge, died November 21, 1851, aged 62.

“ DEATH OF HENRY TROWBRIDGE, ESQ.

“ We regret to be obliged to announce, to-day, the death of Henry Trowbridge, Esq., one of our elderly and substantial citizens,—a lineal descendant of one of the proprietors of the town; for a long period the head of one of the largest shipping houses in the State, and widely known to commercial men throughout the country and, to a considerable extent, abroad. He was a prudent

* Ezekiel Hayes, descended from George Hayes, who came from Scotland to Derbyshire, in England. He was anxious to see London, whither he went, and having received some statements in regard to America, came to this country. He married, and had three children. His wife and children having died, he afterwards married, as his second wife, Abigail Dibbal, of Long Island, and removed to Windsor, Connecticut, in 1682. By his second marriage he had ten children. The tradition in regard to the name of Hayes is this: “The name of Hayes began of valor. There was war between the Scotch and Irish. Hayes, the ancestor of the family, was ploughing and harrowing with his sons in the field. The Scots were retreating from the Irish, and passed by where Hayes and his sons were at work. He said to his sons, ‘Pull your harrow and plough to pieces and fight.’ They engaged, and beat the Irish. While the father was sitting down to rest himself, the king passed by and observed him, and said, ‘your name shall be Hayes.’ He then gave him a large tract of land for his valor. Therefore the coat of arms for Hayes shall be a plough and harrow, and a battle-field.” Communicated by a descendant.

and sagacious merchant, and, by means of his talent and his wealth, exercised a great influence in our community. He was rather strong in his prejudices, and when he had taken a stand, whether it happened to be a popular or unpopular position, he, believing it to be right, was immovable in it. For this reason he was strongly opposed by a portion of his fellow citizens—but whether right or wrong in his views, his opponents, we believe, never doubted the honesty of his intentions and the integrity of his character. We have met with Mr. Trowbridge on many occasions, during the last twenty years, and have combatted some of his opinions, and opposed some of his measures, but in all such differences we never experienced anything but kindness and courtesy at his hands. We have always regarded him as our friend, and in this we are sure we have not been mistaken; and we doubt not that there are hundreds who can speak as confidently in the same way. Mr. Trowbridge was a member of the Center Church, of which the Rev. Dr. Bacon is pastor, and we have always understood that he was among the most liberal in his gifts for the spread of the Gospel and other religious and charitable causes. We understand that he has left several handsome bequests to the different benevolent and religious societies of the day. Those who know with what peculiar fondness he regarded his family, and how devoted he ever was to their welfare and happiness, will appreciate the nature of the affliction that has fallen upon them,—but here we may be trespassing beyond our province, and we venture no farther.

The departure of so prominent and active a citizen and merchant will create a void that will be noticed with sorrow for a long time to come. His sickness was of two week's continuance, during which he suffered but little, and his mind, up to the hour of death, retained that vigor which characterized him while in health. Through his sickness he was sustained by the consolations of the religion, of which he had long been a professor, and his death was peaceful and happy."

(From the New York Independent.)

"Death of Henry Trowbridge, Esq., who died on the 7th instant, aged 68. He was widely known as the senior partner of the first commercial house in his native city. For many years past his firm—H. Trowbridge and Sons—has been frequently spoken of as the head of the West India business in the United States. Two hundred years ago, when the settlers of New Haven began to establish commercial relations with the West India Islands, his first American ancestor was engaged in the same business. From his early youth Mr. Trowbridge was closely attached to the Church in which his ancestors worshipped, and in which he himself had been presented to God in baptism by parental piety. Forty years ago, when he had never made any religious profession, his house was in affliction. His wife was on the bed of sickness, and their first-born, and only child, was near to death. He sent for his pastor (the now venerable Professor Stuart), and requested that the child might be baptized. The request was declined, 'You,' said the pastor to the parents, 'make no profession, and exhibit no evidence of having given yourselves to God; what will it be then more than a solemn but empty form for you to offer your child in baptism?' Some parents, in such circumstances, would immediately go to another church; but these parents took a different course. On that day, they resolved, and pledged themselves to each other, that they would seek the kingdom of God. On that day the father, for the first time, by the mother's bed-side, lifted up his voice in prayer, and from that day, to the day of his death, prayer was habitually offered in their dwelling. Though for more than thirty years afterwards he felt that his religious character was not sufficiently clear to justify him in making a religious profession, his family was thence forward a religious family; and few families have been happier, or have shared more largely in the blessings of the covenant. The sagacity and energy of Mr. T., as a man of business, and the success of all his undertakings, were proverbial. It was remarked that his ships always made prosperous voyages, and that seeming reverses generally turned in his favor. In his family, too, he seemed to be exempted from those calamities which come to all. But, during the last season, he has been made acquainted with affliction. His only brother, who had been for more than thirty years his next door neighbor, died at a moment's notice. Three of his grand-children were taken away, two of them in circumstances peculiarly afflicting. At last sickness came nearer still, his wife and his youngest daughter were brought simultaneously to the brink of death. They were spared, but before they had begun to recover, the fatal disease had fastened upon him. Doubtless these successive strokes of affliction were necessary to prepare him for the closing scene. That they had that effect was obvious to all that saw him. Having arranged all his secular affairs at the commencement of his sickness, he dismissed the world entirely from his thoughts, and waited for the will of God. When it appeared at last that he must die, he gave his parting farewells and counsels to his children and grand-children, and then, calmly, cheerfully, and with an humble reliance on the Saviour, yielded himself to death. For many years he had been a regular contributor to many of our religious charities. In his last will he bequeathed to the American Board of Foreign Missions $5,000, to the American Home Missionary Society $5,000, to the Bible Society $2,000, to the Tract Society $2,000, to the Seamen's Friend Society $2,000, to the First Church, in New Haven, for the use of the poor, $2,000, with other charitable bequests, amounting in all to more than $20,000."

British. Captain Trowbridge succeeded in selling the ship and cargo, to avoid confiscation, and made his escape to Batavia. After an eventful period of a year or two there, and a most daring enterprise on the coast of New Holland, where he recovered, by the aid of divers, upwards of $250,000 in specie from a sunken wreck, he was again captured, with all his specie, by his old enemies, the British, being taken by a frigate and carried to Java, and afterwards to Calcutta, where he was imprisoned in the famous Black Hole of that city. Finally he was taken to England, as a prisoner of war, and confined in Dartmoor prison, where he was at the time of the massacre of April 6, 1815. On the news of peace, Captain T. was released, on the 10th of April, and arrived at New York, June 5, 1815, having been absent five and a half years.

Fond of enterprise, he removed to the West, and settled at Rochester in 1816, where he was for many years at the head of the well known commercial house of John T. Trowbridge & Co. After accumulating an ample fortune, the vicissitudes of life again followed him in the loss of property, and, in 1836, he removed to Racine County, Wisconsin, where he has since resided, surrounded by his family and many friends, enjoying the veneration and respect of all. We doubt if a more eventful history could be written of any person than of Captain Trowbridge. He was a brave, generous and honest man, in faith and practice a Christian. During all the trials and vicissitudes of life, he maintained a good profession. On his removal to the West, almost a wilderness, (the country, where he was, being destitute of the means of worship in the sanctuary,) it was his practice to hold religious services at his own house, and to which the people for miles distant resorted for worship, until the country became settled. He died peaceful and happy, in assurance of a blessed immortality."

Church. He was one of the most active citizens, in New Haven, in forming the Sanitary Commission, and contributed greatly to its success by pecuniary assistance as well as personal service. When the time arrived in that great struggle to maintain the life of the nation, that rendered a draft necessary to furnish soldiers for the army, on the very day of the draft, when a crowd, numbering from three to five thousand, assembled at the North Portico of the State House, in New Haven, a citizen's meeting was organized, with Mr. Trowbridge for chairman. Prominent citizens immediately came forward with offers of money for the encouragement of volunteers. Different individuals offered $15 each for a volunteer, some pledging that amount a-piece for several men. Mr. Trowbridge stood at the head of that noble list, which contributed sufficient to raise the requisite number of men without a draft, he offering $15 a-piece for thirty men—and at half-past 4 p. m. it was announced that the quota for New Haven was filled, when nine tremendous cheers from the assembly burst forth, and the crowd separated for their homes. Mr. Trowbridge manifested the same unfaltering zeal in the cause of liberty until victory crowned the Union arms. He has always manifested a taste for historical researches; was one of the founders of the New Haven County Historical Society, and contributed an important article to the first volume of its collections, being an History of the Construction of the Long Wharf, in New Haven. He was also the projector of this Family History, and the entire race of Trowbridges, in this country, are indebted to him for having furnished the pecuniary means to defray the expenses of preparing and publishing this volume. It is but just to remark further that Mr. Trowbridge has been, through life, one of the most efficient supporters of the First Ecclesiastical Society of New Haven, and is a valued member of the First Congregational Church.

(Extract from "Connecticut in the War.")

"Of private benefactors, one of the earliest and most thoughtful, was Thomas R. Trowbridge, of New Haven, who, before a company was yet formed, offered five hundred dollars for the support of the families of volunteers; thus beginning a course of unstinted liberality, which he continued throughout the struggle, and initiating that great patriotic charity, which continued by

To Mary Webster Southgate, daughter of Horatio Southgate, of Portland, Maine, July 24, 1838, by whom he had six children. In 1857, accompanied by her husband and two daughters, Mrs. Trowbridge visited Europe for the benefit of her health. The fond hopes of restoration were disappointed, and she died in Paris, France, May 3, 1860. Her remains were brought to New Haven and interred in the family burying place.

Mrs. Trowbridge was descended from Gov. William Bradford, in the following line:—

2d, To Sarah Coles Hull, daughter of Edward Hull, of Brooklyn, New York, August 8, 1861. She is descended from Tristram Hull, who came from England to Barnstable, Mass., previous to 1645, who was distinguished in the annals of that town, and from his son, Captain John Hull, born March, 1654. He commanded a ship, trading between Newport, Rhode Island and London. Charles Wager, who afterwards became Sir Charles, Admiral in the British Navy, and Privy Counsellor to Queen Ann, was bound, when a boy, apprentice to Captain Hull. "It was with Captain Hull that he learned that nautical skill, as well as that rigid integrity and upright honor, which has made his name, deservedly, famous." It was for gallant action while with Capt Hull, on a voyage to London, in destroying a privateer, that, on his arrival, in London, he was recommended to and obtained an advantageous place in the British Navy. The warmest friendship between Captain Hull and Sir Charles Wager continued until the death of the former. Sir Charles Wager died May 24, 1743, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. For six generations the Hulls were Quakers. Mr. Trowbridge has three children by his second marriage. The following is Mrs. Trowbridge's line of descent from Tristram Hull:—

Mr. Trowbridge, is a member of the well-known firm of Henry Trowbridge's Sons, in New Haven, has travelled extensively in Europe, and distinguished himself for his researches relative to the history of the Trowbridge family, in England, and also by various acts of Christian benevolence. It was in the month of January, 1860, that he visited Taunton, in Somersetshire, the birth-place and early home of Thomas Trowbridge, the ancestor of those bearing the name in this country, of which a detailed account is given in a letter to his elder brother, Thomas, in the introductory part of this work. Among his recent acts of munificence is a gift of four thousand dollars to the Yale Theological Seminary, for the establishment of a Library of Reference, as a memorial of a beloved son, who died December 3, 1869, aged 7 years. He could not have chosen a better method to make his name hallowed among the wise and good of our land to the latest generation. The following brief notice of this donation appeared in a number of the Yale Courant in 1870:—

“Among the other attractions of the new building of the Theological Department of the College, is the spacious and beautiful library room, opened yesterday, which has been fitted up in parlor style, and furnished with a complete theological reference library, by the munificence of Henry Trowbridge, Esq., of New Haven, in memory of a promising son, who was taken from him in December last. The whole sum given for this purpose amounts to four thousand dollars. The idea of such a library was borrowed from the British Museum, in the reading room of which are placed the books most frequently called for in every department of knowledge, which those admitted to its use can take from the shelves and consult or study in the room at their leisure. This great advantage will now be given to the students in the theological department, who will be almost as much favored as if each had such a library in his own room. About half of the books ordered are already on the shelves, and the remainder are expected soon. They consist of the latest and best books needed for theological study, such as lexicons, in various languages, encyclopædias, Bible dictionaries, works on the literature, geography and the original text of the Bible, ancient versions and modern translations of the Scriptures, critical commentaries on the Old and New Testaments, works on psychology, ethics, natural theology, translations of the early Christian fathers, Church history in all ages, the history of doctrines, works on homiletics, pastoral theology, and the best sermons of all times and countries. There are also a few of the best works on history and general literature." "In founding such a library Mr. Trowbridge has rendered a service to the interests of the Theological Department which cannot fail to add largely to its working power, and which, its Alumni and friends throughout the country now, and for a long time to come, will be sure to remember."

EZEKIEL H. TROWBRIDGE, son of Henry and Harriet (Hayes) Trowbridge, born April 21, 1818, married Sarah Ann Day, daughter of Zelotes and Eliza Atwater Day, June 23, 1840. Resides in New Haven, and is a member of the firm of Henry Trowbridge's Sons, and largely engaged in the West India trade.

Mr. Trowbridge has long been known in the mercantile world as a merchant of more than ordinary acquirements; comprehensive in his views, quick to perceive, skill to plan, great and untiring energy to execute, he is thus never at a loss to act in any emergency in business. Entering into the counting house of his father at the age of fifteen years, he had the advice and advantage of his father's great business knowledge and experience, and was thus early pushed forward in business, the motto and watchword of his father being "Do something yourself, and if not as well done as by men of experience, and thereby mistakes and errors occur through inexperience of young men, yet it is wisdom well earned, and if mistakes are sometimes made they will thus learn to avoid them the next time; in this way a practical knowledge of business is gained that can scarcely be acquired in other ways."

Accordingly the sons were very early intrusted with business transactions of importance, not only at home, but in neighboring states; a practical knowledge and self reliance was obtained by the young men, which in subsequent years was of great importance.

Ezekiel was sent to the West Indies, long before the age of twenty-one years, to transact important business of the firm, and subsequently, before that age, was placed in sole charge thereof at one of the Islands for a period of about one year.

In this very practical manner the father educated his four sons who at his death succeeded to the business, and which laid the foundation of their success. Ezekiel profited well by this early instruction and work, and thus has been able to make his mark in the business world. Connected with his father and three brothers for many years, he has held a prominent and important part of the business, and possessed of vigorous health he has devoted a life-time to business in which he has been eminently successful, thus setting an example to his junior partners, and young men generally of the present age, that strict attention to business, combined with intelligence and such acquirements as are within the reach of all at the present day will lead to success.

A prominent member of the firm, he still pursues his business with all the ardor and energy of his earlier years. By great system in his business habits, he has found time to attend to his investments, and connected as he has been for several years, in the direction of incorporations, among which may be named the New York and New Haven Railroad, and other Railroad Companies, and the Second National Bank of New Haven, it is not too much to say that his experience and business knowledge has been valued by his associates, and conducive to the prosperity of those companies.

He has not, however, had a life of unalloyed happiness; bereaved by death of an only and beloved daughter at the age of eighteen years, under circumstances peculiarly afflictive, she being at school in a neighboring State, sickened so severely that her parents, summoned to her bedside, were unable to convey her home, and thus she passed away. Again affliction came upon them by the death of their youngest son "Bertie," of seven years; he was suddenly taken away after a short illness, death in either case being very unexpected. Once more affliction came; the young wife of his eldest son was taken away in the bloom of youth. Thus, notwithstanding great temporal prosperity in business, he has sorely tasted "Life's Sorrows."

Still not cast down, he has resolutely summoned his energies, and pursued the even tenor of his way.

This tribute to his brother is rendered by the one connected in business with him for thirty-seven years, and under whose auspices this book is published, and subsequently inserted herein without the knowledge of any person except the writer and publisher, since the book was bound.

HARRIET EMILY TROWBRIDGE, daughter of Henry and Mary (Webster) Trowbridge, born April 8, 1841, married, in New Haven, William H. Allen, of New York, October 19, 1865. Mrs. Allen has enjoyed facilities for the improvement of her mind, by foreign travel, that few ladies of this or any other country, at her age, have experienced, having made three extensive tours abroad, two before, and one since her marriage. The first occupied some fourteen months, in the years 1858-9, on which, in company with her parents and older sister, and her cousin, Ezekiel Hayes Trowbridge, Jr., she visited the most important places of the various countries of Europe, extending the journey to Athens and Constantinople, and to Smyrna, in Asia Minor. The second occupied nearly a year, on which, leaving New York, in the month of August, 1863, she went around the world, via Aspinwall, Panama, and San Francisco, spending three months with her older sister, Mrs. S. E. Burrows, and husband at Hong Kong, China. On this tour, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Burrows, she visited Canton, as also several of the islands of the South Pacific, passing through the Bay of Bengal, visiting Ceylon and many other important points in Southern Asia. She continued her journey up the Red Sea and across the Isthmus of Suez, to Cairo, in Egypt. While in Egypt she visited the Pyramids—then sailed through the Mediterranean to Cadiz, in Spain, and having visited the most important cities and villages of Spain, passed on to Paris, and having spent a few days in the French capital, embarked at Havre for New York, where she arrived in August, 1866. The third voyage embraced the tour of Europe with her husband and two younger sisters, in the winter of 1867 and 8, occupying about nine months. An interesting narrative of these travels is found in the Appendix, Note K.

MILES MARSHALL TROWBRIDGE, son of Stewart H. and Diana (Lockwood) Trowbridge, born May 22, 1843, married Rachel Croford, February 22, 1869. He enlisted in the war of the rebellion, and left Milwaukie as one of the color guards of the First Wisconsin Infantry, October 28, 1861. The regiment was employed in keeping open communications and similar duties in Kentucky, until October, 1862. On the 8th of that month the regiment participated in the battle of Perryville. During the battle the regiment in front lost every Field Officer, and was thrown into confusion and obliged to retire. The First Wisconsin was advanced to its place, and, with the assistance of artillery, the position was held until all the artillery horses were killed or became unmanageable. The regiments of the brigade were ordered to hold the ground while the guns could be withdrawn. About this time a portion of the First made a dash, and captured the flag of the First Tennessee Regiment, and bore it in triumph to the ranks of the First Wisconsin. Protected by the fire of other regiments, the First took every gun and caisson from the field by hand. The flag was riddled by balls, and the flag-staff severed in two places. All the color-guard but three were killed or wounded. For the service rendered on this occasion, in withdrawing the guns, the regiment received the thanks of the Battery, and a full complement of colors was presented to it by Indiana as a recognition of the bravery displayed in recovering the guns of an Indiana battery. Early in this engagement Mr. Trowbridge received what would have been a mortal wound, had he not been cared for in the hospital by his father, and brought away as soon as he could endure removal. He was discharged as permanently disabled, but he finally recovered sufficiently to re-enter the army in 1865, was at the defense of Alatoona, and constituted one of Sherman's forces in marching to the sea. At the close of the war he was mustered out of service, and returned to his farming operations.

CAPT. WILLIAM TROWBRIDGE, JR., son of William and Elizabeth (Selivant) Trowbridge, born November, 1657, married Thankful Stow, daughter of Rev. Samuel Stow, of Middletown. She was born May 5, 1654. He resided in New Haven, was a sea-faring man, accustomed to make voyages to the West Indies, as well as to Fayal, and other foreign ports. Cotton Marther, in his Magnalia, (Vol. II., page 354, published by Silas Andrus & Son, Hartford, 1853,) records the following interposition of Divine Providence, which, he says, is "attested beyond all contradiction":

"On the 16th of October, in this present year, 1697, there arrived at New Haven, a sloop of about 50 tons, whereof Mr. William Trowbridge was master; the vessel belonged unto New Haven, the persons on board were seven; and seventeen long weeks had they now spent since they came from their port, which was Fayal. By so unusually tedious a passage a terrible famine unavoidably came upon them; and, for the five last weeks of their voyage, they were so destitute of all food, that, through faintness, they would have chosen death rather than life. But they were a praying and a pious company; and when these poor men cried unto the Lord, he heard and saved them. God sent his dolphins to attend them; of these they caught still one every day, which was enough to serve them ; only, on Saturdays, they still caught a couple, and on the Lord's day they could catch none at all. With all possible skill and care they could not supply themselves with the fish in any other number or order; and, indeed, with a holy blush, they at last left off trying to do anything on the Lord's day, when they were so well supplied on the Saturdays. Thus, the Lord kept feeding a company that put their trust in him, as he did his Israel with his manna; and this they continued until the dolphins came to that change of water where they used to leave the vessel. Then they so strangely surrendered themselves, that the company took twenty-seven of them, which not only sufficed them until they came ashore, but, also, some of them were brought ashore dried, as a monument of the Divine benignity."

He settled in New Fairfield; became a deacon in the Congregational Church of that place, and was a leading man in that town. Having well filled his sphere in life, he died at the ripe age of 82, beloved by a large circle of acquaintances. His family Bible, in which had been entered the following records of the family, had been preserved by his descendants, until 1858, when it was destroyed by fire, in a store at Abbeville, South Carolina, which belonged to his great-great-grandson, Joseph Trowbridge:

“Samuel Trowbridge, born was he
In seventeen hundred, you may see ;
The month of August he was born,
The sixth and twentieth, in the morn.”

Underneath this verse he recorded the births of his children, as follows:—

Mrs. Trowbridge was the daughter of James Clark and Hannah Stoddard, born in Danbury, Conn., September 2, 1769, where she died February 26, 1865, aged 96. "At the beginning of the American revolution she was a child of 7 years of age. In her death, one of the remaining links connecting Colonial and National history has been broken. Her memory of the great events of her early life was vivid and clear. In conversation she could easily take you back to those scenes in which she personally mingled. She was a cultivated lady of the old school, and she brought into the present that dignified and elevated bearing which characterized the last century. In personal qualities of mind and heart, she would be prominent in any circle of society. She was a decided Christian, and rejoiced in every advancement of her Redeemer's kingdom. On the arm of her beloved, she leaned, when in the dark valley, and spoke of His preciousness, as she took her departure to be forever with the Lord." After the decease of Dr. Trowbridge she was married to Dr. D. N. Carrington, whom also she survived many years. She had four children by Dr. Trowbridge.

AARON BENEDICT, JUN., son of Aaron and Hester Trowbridge Benedict, born August 9, 1785, married Charlotte Porter, of Waterbury, in 1808. He had, at an early age, been a member of Yale College, but after eighteen months, was obliged to leave on account of ill health. He removed to Waterbury, First Society in 1804, engaged in mercantile and manufacturing pursuits, in which he has been eminently successful, until this time, and has accumulated a large fortune. He has twice represented his town in the State Legislature, and for many years has been Deacon of the First Congregational Church of Waterbury. He is widely known for integrity, soundness of judgment and strong common sense, for his generous donations to the various objects of Christian benevolence, for his matured opinions, and wise, considerate action under all circumstances. Though now past 85, he is still vigorous, and attends to his business duties with regularity and precision.

LYDIA TROWBRIDGE, daughter of Stephen and Lydia (Crofut) Trowbridge, born February 22, 1761, married Thaddeus Starr, of Bethel, Conn., May 22, 1783. He was born December 14, 1759. She died July 13, 1838, aged 77. The following tribute was given to her, by her pastor, the Rev. John Greenwood, at the time of her death:—

“This aged disciple will be classed by all who knew her, with the goodly fellowship of those whose life and death alike prove the reality and power of religion. Endowed by nature with a strong and independent mind, her religious opinions, which were thoroughly evangelical, were decided and firm, and rendered her less liable than most to be tossed about with the varying winds of doctrine. While her estimate of the fallen condition of our sinful nature, was such as precluded all confidence in herself, her reliance on the promises of Scripture, and the atoning merits of the Saviour, was entire, and imparted a peculiar serenity to all her feelings. And, as the surrender of her heart to Christ was not a secret act, to which she was first urged by her near prospect of eternity, she knew, from long experience of his power and grace, on whom she had believed. The distinguished features of her religious character, through a long course of Christian profession, were a strong and intelligent faith in the peculiar doctrines of the gospel; a meek and quiet spirit, in all her intercourse with others, and a calm and satisfied acquiescence in all the revealed purposes of her Heavenly Father. Her dying experience corresponded with her living character. When she felt that the hand of death was upon her, she anticipated the moment of her departure with a tranquilizing consciousness that all was well, and had an assured confidence that her Redeemer and Lord would keep that which she had committed to him against that day. She died in peace. The prevailing impression left on the minds of both attendants and friends and sorrowing relatives, by the brief but impressive scenes of her last sickness and final exit, was that a Christian can be calm even on the verge of eternity; that religion is a portion for both worlds.” Mr. Thaddeus Starr died May 3, 1841, aged 81.

DEACON BILLY TROWBRIDGE, son of Billy and Rhoda (Beardsley) Trowbridge, born March 26, 1782, married Polly Stewart, of Colerain, Mass., in 1802, and died at Syracuse, May 8, 1855. The following brief outline of his life appeared in the Religious Recorder of that city, immediately after his decease:

"Died, in this city, May 8, Billy Trowbridge, aged 73. The deceased was a resident of Truxton, Cortland County, New York, for forty-nine years, where he was appointed to positions of high responsibility and honor, in various departments of business and civil life. He represented that county, in the State Legislature, during three consecutive years. While in the full flush of health and prospective long life, he consecrated himself to the Saviour's service, with a cheerful confidence that strengthened with each succeeding year. Eight years since he removed to this city, and connected himself with the First Presbyterian Church. His unaffected piety and earnest solicitude for the interests of religion, soon marked him as one fitting to bear the office of Ruling Elder, to which the unanimous suffrages of the Church soon elected him. In this position he evinced a constant desire to be at work; to do something in the Master's vineyard, and he looked forward, with pleasure, to the time when a settled pastor should lead and direct these efforts. In the family and social relation, his qualities of heart shone most conspicuous, and his unwavering affection and uniform solicitude for the welfare of those within its limits, left an impression which time cannot efface. He leaves an afflicted widow and a large family of sons, grown to manhood, and occupying stations of usefulness in society and the church. They, with the church, will mourn his absence, but, he has only gone before. For months and years he had 'set his house in order,' and when the summons came, he was 'found ready and waiting.' "

The regiment left Newbern, January, 1863, and landed on St. Helena Island, S. C.; where, and on the neighboring islands, he remained four or five months, encountering much fighting during that time. He landed on Morris Island the day of the first charge on Fort Wagner; took part in the charge; was then detailed as one of the sharpshooters, and advanced in the rifle pits in front of Fort Wagner. He helped build the battery called the Swamp Angel, from which the Greek Fire was thrown into the City of Charleston. He was in the charges that took Fort Wagner and Fort Greg; also, took part in the Boat Charge on Fort Sumpter, under the murderous fire of the enemy from three sides. The regiment remained on Morris Island three months, during the siege of Charleston, constantly under the enemy's fire night and day. The regiment left Morris Island in October for St. Augustine, Florida, to recruit, as most of the soldiers were on the sick list. A few days after arriving at St. Augustine he was taken sick, and remained three months in the hospital, when he was discharged, and arrived home the 4th of February.

DEACON PHILO M. TROWBRIDGE, son of Edmund and Esther L. (Mallory) Trowbridge, born August 4, 1810, married Sarah Earl Akin, daughter of Lemuel Akin, deceased, of Norfolk, Conn., September 18, 1837. She was great-grand-daughter of Henry Akin, who emigrated from Londonderry, Ireland, in 1710, landed at Boston, Mass., where he married Isabel, daughter of Rev. Mr. Holmes. He afterwards located at Middletown, Conn., and died there in his old age. She is also fourth in descent from Sarah Earl (from whom she received her name,) who married David Johnson in England. Johnson and his wife came to this country, settled in Durham, Conn., where he was shot by an Indian, while standing in the door of their dwelling, and immediately expired (vide Cothorn's Woodbury, page 742-3.) Mr. Trowbridge resides in Woodbury, Conn., is one of the most prominent and useful citizens, has held many offices of trust in the town, and has for many years sustained the office of Deacon in the Church. It is due to him, also, to add, that he, many years since, made very extensive researches among the families of that branch of the great Trowbridge family to which he belongs, with a view to publication, and that he has rendered the compiler of this work essential aid in his investigations. Mr. Trowbridge has no children.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON TROWBRIDGE, son of Dr. John F. and Rosamond (Packard) Trowbridge, born October 18, 1818, married Harriet Bentley, October, 1848. Resides in Seward, Seward County, Nebraska. Is a farmer.

JOSEPH MOTT TROWBRIDGE, son of Dr. John F. and Rosamond (Packard) Trowbridge, born April 26, 1824, was educated at West Point, is a Civil Engineer; was Captain of Company A, First Battery 16th New York Infantry, and for some months aid to General Rosecrans, in the engineering department in the Army of Tennessee, and was mustering and disbursing officer, at Milwaukee, for a year and a half. He participated in several smaller engagements, and in the general battle of Chickamauga, where he had the honor to obtain special mention for meritorious conduct. He was entrusted at that battle, by the Commanding General, with the delivery of the last order, directing General Sheridan, commanding the reserves, "to bring forward all his troops with the utmost possible dispatch." The execution of this order involved special peril—being exposed, mounted and alone, to the fire of the rebel sharp-shooters, at short range. He delivered the order, and saw it executed. Escaped unhurt, his clothes much cut; and has now, in his possession, a sword, the scabbard of which bears the indentation of a rifle ball, received at that time. After this, his health failing, he resigned in the Spring of 1864. He married Ada McCormick, February 1, 1854. He resides at South Side, Statten Island, New York.

OLIVER E. TROWBRIDGE, son of Truman and Rebecca (Stone) Trowbridge, born December 3, 1843, married Julia Hoyt, December 3, 1863. He enlisted at Danbury, August 28, 1862, in Company B, of the 23d Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers; went South, to New Orleans, with General Bank's expedition, in December, 1862. The regiment was detailed to guard the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, running from New Orleans to Brashear City. Company B, being stationed at La Fourche Crossing. There they were attacked by the enemy, June 21, 1863, and he was severely wounded, and reported dead. The loyal forces evacuated the place June 25, taking all the wounded, except the subject of this sketch. The enemy entered next day, taking him, with the surgeon and nurse, prisoners, where they were held for several weeks. After this he was taken to New Orleans, and while there, in the St. Louis Hospital, the regiment came home, leaving him behind. He finally arrived at Danbury, September 10, 1863, when he received a discharge. He was wounded by a Minnie ball, which entered his right side, near the hip, passed through his bowels, and came out on the left side of the spine, opening the intestines, so that they discharged through the wound for twenty days. In consequence of his wound, he receives a pension from the government. Mr. Trowbridge is a hatter by trade, and resides at South Norwalk, Conn.

THIRD GENERATION.

4.

DEACON JAMES TROWBRIDGE, third and youngest son of Thomas Trowbridge, the settler, from Taunton, England, was born at Dorchester, Mass., in 1636, and baptized in 1638. In 1641 his father moved, with his family, to New Haven, Connecticut. James, however, when near his majority, returned to Dorchester, and occupied lands owned by his father prior to his removal. He was twice married—1st, to Margaret Atherton, daughter of Major-General Humphrey Atherton, December 30, 1659, being about twenty three years of age, by whom he had seven children. She died August 17, 1672. 2d, he married Margaret Jackson, daughter of Deacon John Jackson, January 30, 1674, by whom he had seven children. In 1664 he moved from Dorchester to Cambridge Village, (now Newton). The Dorchester Church Records state that the wife of Thomas Wiswall, the wife of goodman Kinwright, and Margaret, the wife of James Trowbridge, were dismissed to the church, gathered at Cambridge Village, 11th of July, 1664. After the death of his father-in-law, Deacon John Jackson, he was elected to succeed him in office, in 1675, the duties of which he discharged until his death, a period of 42 years. In 1675 he purchased of Deputy Governor Danforth 85 acres of land, with a dwelling-house and out-buildings thereon, which the Governor had occupied for some years, bounded with the highways W. and S., the narrow lane N., his own land E., "the dividing line being straight through the swamp." This estate has always been occupied by his descendants, and is the property, at present (1869), of Mr. Nathan Trowbridge, of the seventh generation from the first settler. He was chosen one of the first

REV. CALEB TROWBRIDGE, the fourteenth and youngest child of Deacon James and Margaret (Jackson) Trowbridge, born November 7, 1692, graduated at Harvard, in the Class of 1710, being eighteen years of age; was ordained at Groton, Mass., March 2, 1715. He was twice married—1st, to Sarah Oliver, daughter of Thomas Oliver, March 10, 1715. She died January 16, 1717. 2d, to Hannah Walters, daughter of Rev. Nehemiah Walters, of Roxbury. He died September 9, 1760, aged 68.

The following is taken from his monument:—"Underneath this stone lies the body of Rev. Caleb Trowbridge, late Pastor of the Church of Christ, in Groton, born of respectable parents, in the town of Newton, educated at Harvard College, in Cambridge, New England, of such natural and acquired endowments, as rendered him an ornament and a blessing in the several relations which he sustained.

"He was a good steward of the House of God, and discharged the duties of his Pastoral relations with prudence and impartiality, diligence and fidelity.

"He was a tender and loving husband, affectionate and kind parent, an agreeable and faithful friend, and a useful member of society.

"He was much beloved and respected while he lived, and died, greatly lamented, the 9th day of September, A. D. 1760, in the 69th year of his age, and 46th of his ministry, and is, we trust, enjoying the reward of his labors in the kingdom of his Lord. And, in honor to his memory, his loving people have erected this monument over his grave."

"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

"The memory of the just is blessed."

JUDGE EDMUND TROWBRIDGE, son of Thomas Trowbridge, born in 1709, graduated at Harvard College, at the age of 19, in the class of 1728, studied law, and became one of the most eminent of the profession in Massachusetts. Among the numerous tributes to the memory of Judge Trowbridge, the following is preserved, in manuscript, in the Antiquarian Library at Worcester, Mass., prepared many years since by Samuel Jennison:

"Edmund Trowbridge was born at Newton, in 1709, and graduated at Harvard in the class of 1728. He was appointed Attorney General of Massachusetts in 1749, and continued in the office until appointed Judge of the Supreme Court in 1767. In 1764 he was elected a member of the Council. He married, March 15, 1732, Miss Martha Remington, daughter of Judge Remington, of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. She died in July, 1772. The legal talents of Mr. Trowbridge were of the highest order." The following incidental remarks, contained in the sketch of the character of Chief Justice Parsons, by his successor, Judge Parker, contain the best eulogium of this distinguished man:—"I will not omit to mention, for I wish not to exaggerate his powers, that he enjoyed one advantage, in his education, beyond any of his contemporaries, except the learned, able and upright Chief Justice Dana. I refer to the society and conversation of Judge Trowbridge, perhaps the most profound common lawyer of New England before the Revolution. This venerable old man, like some of the ancient sages of the law in England, pursued his legal disquisitions long after he had ceased to be actively engaged in the profession, from an ardent attachment to the law as a science, and had employed himself in writing essays and forming elaborate readings upon abstruse and difficult points of law. Many of his works are now extant in manuscript, and some in print, and they abundantly prove the depth of his learning and the diligence and patience of his research."

President Adams, in a sketch of the life of Jonathan Sewall, has an incidental notice of Mr. Trowbridge. He says that "he commanded the practice in Middlesex, Worcester and several other counties, and that he had power to crush, by his frown or his nod, any young lawyer in his county."

Mr. Knapp remarks that "Trowbridge had been distinguished not only as a profound lawyer and an able advocate, but a zealous law officer of the government, but when he saw the people rise in hostility, his courage forsook him, and he fled from the confusion around him, and tried to shut his eyes to what was going on, or to keep the din of arms from disturbing his lucubrations, and that he who had once instructed Parsons, and possessed a mind so discriminating and profound, could hardly, in the latter part of his life, comprehend his own legal decisions made in the strength of intellectual power."

During a part of his life he bore the name of Goffe, after an uncle, but subsequently resumed his own name, and presided at the trial of Preston, at Boston. He was urged by Hutchinson, the Governor, who had a great respect for him as a learned lawyer and able judge, to continue on the bench, but disapproving the tenure by which the office was (now) held, resigned, although well disposed to the Royal government. He was afterward neutral.

Mr. Parsons says his library was not only the best, but probably the only thoroughly good one in New England.

NOTE.—He retired to Byfield, where he resided in the family of the Rev. Moses Parsons. Professor Parsons represents him as a Tory in heart, and to some extent in speech, but he remained inactive, perhaps neutral, through the contest. He did not abstain from the conflict through cowardice or physical unfitness, for he had a strong proclivity to war and combat, and was a “master of fence,” and an excellent horseman. He was probably restrained by his friends Ellery and Dana. During half of his long life he was, by common consent, regarded the most profound lawyer in New England, when Judge Kent represents him as “the oracle of the common law.” He died in Cambridge April 2, 1793, aged 84, leaving no issue. By his will, dated November, 1791, codicil April 1792, proved June, 1794, he bequeaths to his niece, Lydia, wife of John Hastings, Esq., all his lands in Woburn and Wilmington, and some in Cambridge, in trust. To Lucy Channing, his silver teapot, pursuant to his wife’s desire. To the children of his late sister, Chamberlain, five-sixths of his land in Sutton. To his kinsman (half-brother), John Trowbridge, one-sixth of his land in Sutton. To his domestics, in small bequests; and makes his nephew, Francis Dana, Esq., the residuary legatee and sole executor. He was a large land holder in Cambridge and Cambridgeport, the value of which was greatly enhanced by the erection of West Boston bridge, in 1793, all of which passed into the hands of Chief Justice Dana, his nephew and law pupil.

LYDIA TROWBRIDGE, daughter of Thomas Trowbridge, born in 1710, was married to Richard Dana, in 1737. Mr. Dana was born at Cambridge, Mass., July 7, 1699, graduated at Harvard University, in 1718. He was a grandson of Richard Dana, the first of the family who came from England, and settled at Cambridge in 1640. After practicing law for a time at Marblehead and at Charlestown, Mass., he removed to Boston, where he became a leading barrister. Judge Story, in his work on “American Precedents,” has taken more examples from him than any other pleader, except his brother-in-law, Judge Trowbridge. In the obituary notices of him, he is spoken of as the “head of the bar.” He was more generally distinguished for his prominence in the measures of resistance which immediately preceded the Revolution. His age, already advanced, his office of magistrate and position at the bar and in society, and the intrepidity of his character, carried great weight to the side of his young patriot friends. Although devoted to his profession, and, declining office, he was a leading figure in those important political assemblages, where he sometimes presided—the Boston town meetings, from 1763 to 1772. It was the custom of Boston in those troubled times to address the country at large on public affairs, under the form of published instructions to the representatives of the town. Warren, Hancock and the Adamses were on a committee for the purpose. Mr. Dana was always a member, and often at their head. He reported the papers of November, 1767, and May 8, 1770, noted at that time. He was a member of the Association of the Sons of Liberty, and at their celebrated meeting of December 17, 1769, administered to Secretary Oliver the oath of non-execution of the stamp act, and signed a solemn official record of that fact, by which he would seem to have exposed himself to the charge of treason under the constitution of those days. His death, which occurred May 17, 1772, three years before the battle of Lexington, is spoken of in the letters of the leading patriots as a great loss to the cause. (Vide Encyclopedia.) They had two children, and perhaps others.

SARAH TROWBRIDGE, daughter of Rev. Caleb and Hannah (Walton) Trowbridge, born December 3, 1724, married General Artemus Ward, July 31, 1750. Mr. Ward graduated at Harvard in 1748. He resided at Shrewsbury, Mass. but did not study a profession. At the age of twenty-five he was appointed Justice of the Peace; in 1755 a major in the Third Regiment of Militia, in the counties of Middlesex and Worcester, whereof Abraham Williams, Esq., of Marlboro, was Colonel, and in 1758, was major in the Regiment of Foot, commanded by William Williams, raised for a general invasion of Canada. He went on that ill-fated expedition, under the command of Major-General Abercrombie, from which he returned with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. The frequent wars between England and France involved the American colonies in the contests of the mother country, until the conquest of Canada, in 1760. He succeeded Abraham Williams, in the command of the Third Regiment, and represented his town in the General Court, where he took an active part in the controversies between the Colonial Governor and the House of Representatives that preceded the Revolution. On the 19th of May, 1775, General Ward was appointed Commander-in-Chief; on the 20th he received his commission. On the 15th of June General Washington was appointed to the command of all the Continental forces, and on the 17th Artemus Ward, Esq., was appointed First Major-General. In April, 1776, General Ward represented to Congress the feeble state of his health, and his unwillingness to continue in office and receive its emoluments, while prevented, by ill-health, from rendering any equivalent in the service, and requested Congress to accept his resignation of the office of Major-General. He continued in the service, at the request of General Washington, and of the Continental Congress, until the close of that year. In 1777 he was elected, by the House of Representatives, a member of the Executive Council of Massachusetts, and, by the council, President of that Board; and in 1779 appointed a member of the Continental Congress, but prevented by ill-health from taking a seat in that body. After the adoption of the Federal Constitution he was elected and re-elected a member of Congress, (vide Ward Family, page 217).

A monument, in the Burial Ground, at Shrewsbury, erected to his memory, has the following inscription, containing a condensed account of the principal stations in which he acted his part in an eventful period of his country's history:—

“Major-General Artemus Ward, son of Colonel Nahum Ward, H. U., 1748; 1762, a Justice, and in 1776, Chief Justice of the C. C. Pleas, of the County of Worcester; 1758, a major in the expedition against Canada; 1759, appointed Colonel, in 1766 his commission, as Colonel, revoked for his inflexible opposition to arbitrary power, whereupon he informed the Royal Governor that he had been thrice honored—in 1768 chosen one of the Executive Council, by the Royal Governor, and for the same reason negatived and deprived of a seat at that board; 1775, appointed to the command of the army at Cambridge; and by the Continental Congress, and under the Federal Government, repeatedly elected a member; sixteen years a Representative, from his town, in the Legislature, and, in 1785, Speaker of the House of Representatives. Firmness of mind, and integrity of purpose, were characteristics of his whole life, so that he was never swayed by the applause or censure of man, but ever acted under a deep sense of duty to his country and accountability to God. Long will his memory be precious among the friends of liberty and religion.”

Died October 27, 1800, aged 73. His wife, Sarah, died at Shrewsbury, December 13, 1788, aged 68.

2269.

ABIGAIL TROWBRIDGE, daughter of Rev. Caleb and Hannah (Walton) Trowbridge, born November 3, 1740, married Ebenezer Champney, son of Solomon Champney, in 1763. Mr. Champney was born at Cambridge, Mass., and graduated at Harvard College in 1762. He was, at first, designed for the ministry, and to that end studied Divinity and preached about two years. He received a call to settle in Township No. 1, now Mason. This was declined, and he soon after left his profession and studied law. He prepared himself for this vocation in the office of Hon. Samuel Livermore, and was admitted to the Bar, at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, in 1768. In June of that year he moved to New Ipswich, N. H., and entered upon the duties of his profession. In the Spring of 1783, he went to Groton, Mass., where he remained till 1789; was Representative of that town in 1784, and in 1789 he returned to New Ipswich. His first commission as Justice of the Peace, was received from the celebrated John Hancock, of Massachusetts. In 1795 he was appointed Judge of Probate for the county of Hillsboro. The duties of this office were appropriately discharged until his resignation, a few months before his death. His marriage to Abigail Trowbridge connected him with the distinguished families of Cottons and Mathers. By this marriage he had seven children. Mrs. Abigail (Trowbridge) Champney died in 1775, aged 35, and Judge Champney then married again, in 1778, Abigail Parker, by whom he had four children. She died in 1790, and he was married a third time to Susan Wyman, who died the following September. He was a man of very respectable talents, and exercised no inconsiderable influence in his neighborhood. During the earlier years of his practice he was the only lawyer between Keene, N. H., and Groton, Mass., and had offices both at New Ipswich and the latter place, in conjunction with his son. The labor of attending the courts, at that period, was very great, the circuits being extensive, and all journeys were, necessarily, performed on horseback. During the controversy between the Colonies and the Mother Country, the sentiments of Mr. Champney were adverse to those extreme measures which led to the Revolution. He was a moderate Tory, and, deprecating a resort to arms, believed that, with prudent and moderate counsels, all causes of disaffection might be satisfactorily adjusted. He wished to preserve his loyalty, and the peace of the country, but, like many others who forebore to take part in the contest, he lived to acknowledge the beneficent effects of that struggle, which gave us our liberties and free institutions. (See History of New Ipswich.)

CLEMENT TROWBRIDGE, son of James and Frances (Darrow) Trowbridge, born June 27, 1774, married Olive Smith, of Sheldon, Vt., June 20, 1810. She was daughter of Colonel Elihu Smith, who was some two years in the Revolutionary Army with Washington. He was a merchant, and resided at Cambridge, Vt., until 1832, when he removed to Medina, New York, thence to Albion, Michigan, where he died, December 22, 1853, aged 80 years. The Freemasons of Michigan erected a beautiful monument to his memory at Albion. Mrs. Olive Trowbridge died September 14, 1868, at Chicago, and was buried at Albion, beside her husband. At the time of her interment the following brief notice appeared in the local papers:—"She had, in former years, been a resident of Albion, Michigan. Some thirty years ago, she and her husband became citizens of this village, and were thus identified with it, almost at its very beginning. Mrs. Trowbridge was possessed of more than ordinary endowments of both mind and body. Her noble and dignified bearing was the expression of the nobleness of her heart and intellect. As she had removed from Albion about twelve years ago, the number of her acquaintances was limited to few; but these held her in the highest esteem. As a Christian, she was devoted to the Lord and his Church, and her benevolence was as diffusive as the extent of her ability. She had attained the unusual age of eighty-four years; and it could be said of her, down to the close of her life, that 'none knew her but to love her.'"

DR. AMASA TROWBRIDGE, son of William and Susannah (Sessions) Trowbridge, born May 17, 1779, at Pomfret, Conn., commenced the study of medicine and surgery, and received his diploma as a physician at the age of 20. He married Glorianna Havens Billings, in the year 1805. In 1810 he removed to Watertown, Jefferson County, New York, where he made a permanent residence. At the breaking out of the War of 1812, on the recommendation of General Brown, he was appointed a surgeon in the army, and filled the post, with honor and distinction, until the restoration of peace. He then resumed the practice of his profession, in Watertown, where he continued in active duties until called to a Professorship in the Willoughby Medical College, Ohio, which position he occupied some five or six years, afterwards returning to Watertown, where he spent the remainder of his life in the active duties of his profession. He died April 10, 1859, aged 80. He is said, during his long life, to have amputated nearly one hundred limbs. It is, also, said that he performed the first operation of cutting open the windpipe of a child, successfully, to save its life, in all the known history of surgery, and it was commented upon at the time in foreign Medical Journals, as a most remarkable operation. He had nine children, as follows :

2795.

DR. JOSIAH TROWBRIDGE, son of John and Mary (Bent) Trowbridge, born September 28, 1785, went to Buffalo, New York, in 1811, married Margaret Wintermute, September 22, 1813. He had an extensive medical practice for fifty years, and occupied a conspicuous place in whatever interested the welfare of the city. He died September 18, 1862. A sketch of his life was prepared by his son, Dr. John S. Trowbridge, and published, by request of the Erie County Medical Society, in 1869, from which the following extract is taken:

"The subject of this paper was born in Framingham, Mass. The father of Dr. Trowbridge was no ordinary man, as the records show. The mother of Dr. Trowbridge, like all mothers of good sons, was more than an ordinary woman; pious, affectionate, devoted, and making it her daily duty to cultivate all social and Christian graces in the family. Until the subject of this sketch was somewhat advanced in years, he remained at home, assisting his father on the farm. This proving too laborious, and his health not being equal to the task assigned him, in 1799, he took the position of clerk with an elder brother, who was engaged in mercantile pursuits in Boston. Tiring of this, and seized with a desire to see more of the world, he shipped for Holland, in 1800, and after a most tempestuous return voyage, the vessel reached Charleston, South Carolina, in a disabled condition. He returned to his home, and undertook a course of preparatory studies, with a view to the adoption of the medical profession. Commencing his readings with Dr. Willard, of Uxbridge, he finished with Dr. Kitteridge. I have frequently heard him mention the names of these men with respect and evident pleasure. During this time he taught school two winters, one in Southboro, and the next in his native town. He used to relate, in an amusing way, his experiences as school teacher, involving the manner in which he quelled—what was then quite common—rebellion against the teacher. I need not dwell on the experiences of the teacher in those primitive times, further than to refer to the necessity of the strong application of what may be styled military law; when the teacher assumed the only arm of defense at hand—the poker—and disposed of the insurrection as summarily as the necessities of the case required. According to his representation, like the rebellion among us, one determined effort was sufficient to end the struggle. After the usual course of study, he was licensed to practice. This was in 1808 or 1809. His first professional efforts were put forth in Weathersfield, Vermont, where he remained for a brief time. In company with a young lawyer, an intimate friend, by the name of Walker, in the Spring of 1811, he came to Buffalo on horseback. On this journey they made the acquaintance of the distinguished lawyer, Elisha Williams, and of his wife. The latter afterwards spoke of Doctor Trowbridge as her ‘handsome doctor.’ Mr. Walker returned to Vermont, where he obtained eminence as a lawyer, and considerable political prominence. Buffalo not offering sufficient encouragement to Doctor Trowbridge, he took up his residence at Fort Erie. At this time, that place and Black Rock, were the entrepôts of the then limited commerce of the lakes; buffalo Creek being blockaded by sand bars. Doctor Trowbridge remained in Canada until the declaration of the war, when he returned to Buffalo. During his residence in Canada he formed an attachment which, notwithstanding the belligerent condition of the two countries, resulted in a much more than friendly agreement between himself and one of His Majesty’s subjects.” I cannot do better than make an extract from a letter, dated October 11, 1813, written to his brother, in which he says: “I will now inform you something of myself and family, for you must know that I am married. I am not a friend to the war, but I could not forbear engaging in an expedition. On the 19th of September, 1813, I crossed into the Province of Upper Canada, and succeeded, with the assistance of Cupid (who, by the by, is a good general) in capturing one of his Majesty's subjects, without bloodshed. I have her now in close confinement, and hope I shall be able to keep possession until I have the pleasure of presenting her to you." He was married, in Buffalo, by the Rev. Elkanah Holmes, a Baptist Missionary, September 22, 1813, to Margaret Wintermute. Before and during the war he was associated with Dr. Cyrenus Chapin, who had preceded him in his location. How long this co-partnership continued I have no sufficient data to enable me to say; it commenced before the war, and ended directly after its close. His next business connection was with a most estimable man and physician, Doctor John E. Marshall, the first medical man that settled in Chautauqua County, and who, upon its organization as a distinct county, was appointed County Clerk. He died in 1838, greatly beloved and respected. The first co-partnership was formed September 8, 1823, under the name of Marshall & Trowbridge. In 1829 the firm was dissolved, in consequence of the ill-health of Doctor Marshall, he retiring from practice, when the co-partnership of Trowbridge & Sprague was formed, October 16, 1830. Doctor Marshall renewed practice, and the firm of Trowbridge & Marshall was established, and continued until December 2, 1831. He was an honor to his profession, and a useful member of society. Dr. Trowbridge was also associated with Doctors Bela H. Colgrove, Thomas B. Clark and Alden S. Sprague; at a much later period, with Dr. Charles Winne. All these gentlemen obtained eminence in their profession and challenged respect as citizens. A letter from Dr. Colgrove to John S. Trowbridge, after his father's decease, shows the estimate in which he was held by one who had been an associate in practice. "Among the departed, I remember no one in whose character was blended high professional attainments, with a nice appreciation and practice of those courtesies and amenities, personal and professional, which made the green oasis in human life, more than your father. While you, my dear Doctor, with a filial affection, in the highest degree commendable, are weaving a deserved garland for the brow of your late father, permit me to add my humble chaplet to the wreath; which, though the product of an obscure mountain town, is no exotic; and while the younger members of our profession are seeking models to emulate and imitate, sure I am, they will seek in vain for a better than the late Josiah Trowbridge." It affords me pleasure to be able to testify that these kind expressions of respect and affection were reciprocal.

During the war of 1812 Dr. Trowbridge gave the government his hearty support, although, in common with a large political party, not recognizing its absolute necessity. He was at no time in the regular service, but was attached to a volunteer company of artillery, and always ready to respond, when humanity or the interests of his country made a demand upon him. After the close of the war he received a grant of land, for his services, in the State of Indiana. He was fond of the gun, and on one occasion, in company with Frederick B. Merrill, Lieutenant Dudley, of Perry's fleet, and one or more boatmen, while shooting ducks on Strawberry Island, was surprised and captured by the British, and taken to Fort George. While there the Indians in the service of the government, broke into their quarters, and for a time their safety seemed quite precarious. The intervention of officers and chiefs prevented a massacre. The doctor, with his comrades, was detained a few days, and then discharged, arriving in Buffalo after a most tedious journey on foot. During the war he, with most of the early settlers, had many adventures. At the burning of the village of Buffalo, which was a surprise, although it had been threatened, he, with others, remained engaged in securing the safety of the women and children, and was among the last to leave. As he passed up Main Street he was fired upon by the Indians ambushed in the vicinity. With other refugees, he spent the Winter, and part of the Spring, at various localities east of Buffalo. Here he, with his wife, had some amusing experiences, in the log cabins of the day, which our limits will not allow us to detail.

"Dr. Trowbridge was absent one winter in Washington on private business, and business connected with the interests of the village. He continued to practice his profession until 1836, when he had accumulated a handsome property. He then sold his office property to Dr. Winne, and gave his time to the management of his private affairs—attending to the improvement of his property, erecting the United States Hotel, and other buildings, and loaning his money among his supposed friends. In 1837, when all went by the board, he was, unfortunately, included among them, losing his all. He made an assignment, and was left penniless. This year he was elected Mayor. The Patriot War occurring shortly after he was installed, law and order being put at defiance, and he being unable to maintain the supremacy of the former, resigned. During the years detailed in the foregoing account Dr. Trowbridge held many minor places of usefulness. Once, for a short time, he was side judge. Several times he was supervisor, was associated with Major John G. Camp, as commissioners, for finishing the building now known as "The Old Court House." He was President of the High School, afterwards known as "The Buffalo Military Scientific and Literary Academy." He was secretary of the meeting held at the house of Elias Ransom for the purpose of organizing the Episcopal Society of Saint Paul's Church, February 10, 1817. He was one of its first Vestrymen, held the position for eleven years, and was Warden for six. The original church edifice was enlarged, in 1828, under a contract entered into by him, at an expense of $2,500, he depending upon the increased sale of sittings to make good the outlay. It proved to be a remunerative experiment for the parish. He was the last survivor of the original members—was always greatly interested in the prosperity of the church, giving his services to its members, contributing frequently beyond his means to its treasury.

"He was actively engaged in his profession, in this locality, about fifty years, with only one interruption. His rides extended over long distances, without reference to day or night, the weather, or circumstances, as against personal comfort. Their bounds included Cattaraugus, Creek, Olean, Batavia, Lockport, Tonawanda, Lewiston and Canada; late in life he was called as far as Detroit. In 1838, after his failure, he resumed his profession with Dr. Charles Winne, and continued until 1842. During a portion of this time the writer was a student in their office. Having completed his studies, he was associated with his father, continuing until the Fall of 1852.

Doctor Trowbridge did a large private and consultation practice until 1856, when increasing infirmities compelled him to relinquish it entirely. I have forgotten to mention, in its proper order, that in 1833, the honorary degree of "Doctor of Medicine," was conferred upon him by the "Regents of the University." Thus you have the incidents connected with a long and unpretending, but eminently practical and useful life. His excellencies were appreciated, and most intimately known among suffering humanity, or in quiet association with his fellow-men. He never aspired, by means practised by many, to be known as a popular man. Those who committed themselves to his care were not subject to doubtful experiments, with a view to his personal aggrandisement. He exhibited all those qualities which are needful to constitute the true gentleman, and his amenities were extended to all without distinction. I never knew him, by word or act, to depart from strict honor and decorum. His life was that of one who, in his intercourse with men, exhibited all personal virtues and generous sentiments, founded on an intelligent Christian faith, which is necessary to the good citizen and true physician. In his associations with his medical brethren, it was his highest aim to merit their confidence, and, without reservation, to give them such aid and comfort as the necessities of the case would seem to require. I think I can safely state that in but few instances was this confidence misplaced. The younger members of the profession, with whom he came in contact, were always treated with the most careful consideration. Errors were quietly indicated, and the proper method for their ratification pointed out. We all have had our youthful hopes and aspirations brought low, and our pride grievously wounded by the unfair, overbearing, and supercilious treatment received from our seniors, to whom we looked not only for professional assistance, but for that material aid to which the young practitioner is entitled. With Dr. Trowbridge honor was the polar star. In the early organization of society there was no lack of men of enterprise, possessing high moral character, but with them there were mingled the usual proportion of hardened individuals, lacking principle, but still influential through native talent and energy. Our profession had its proportion. Profanity and intemperance were, unfortunately, lightly regarded in the case of both the physician and the citizen. The parties themselves were not entirely responsible for this unfortunate condition of morals. The practices of society tended to make drunkards, not only of medical men, but of all, not excluding women. With the primitive doctor, it seemed essential, in his exposures, that he should fortify his inner man with stimulus; as often as he visited a patient, it was thought necessary that he should take something internally, that the external man might be protected. As a consequence, a popular practitioner, with a large field of operations, could hardly fail to be more or less under the influence of stimulents before the day's work was ended. There was no discredit in reasonable intemperance. It was a common saying that, "If you can find a sober, you will find a more than ordinary doctor." To such temptations were he and all exposed, the only matter of wonderment is, that any escaped these direful influences. Notwithstanding this condition of society, Dr. Trowbridge, not entirely unaccustomed to the practices of the day, ignored the use of alcohol, and to this rule he most religiously and steadily adhered. It was only near the close of his life, and upon the recommendation of a medical friend, that he consented to use a certain and exact quantity of stimulus daily. I mention this for the reason that it occurred long before the temperance movement was attempted, or had obtained any influence on the popular mind, when any endeavor to practice temperance was rather a cause of reproach than merit. In his business habits Dr. Trowbridge was negligent in securing his just dues, though punctilious in the discharge of his personal liabilities. He was never exorbitant in his charges. Seldom, if ever, employing the law in the enforcement of his claims, and often making liberal deductions, or donating his services. The consequence was, that, notwithstanding a large practice, he was often pressed for means. With his friends, he always erred on the side of liberality. His purse was never closed to the demands of religion and charity. He had many pupils—among them I name Doctors Frank B. Ransom, Charles C. Haddock, O. S. St. John, Badger Dunn, and James P. White. The number, and the positions obtained in their profession and society, indicate his ability as a teacher. Those living will bear me out, when I assert, he always endeavored to influence them with high and honorable sentiments, not only by his teaching, but by his example. By some he was preceded to the grave, while others remain to testify to his many excellent qualities. It is not to the discredit of his associates, to say that he was a courageous, safe, and judicious practitioner. He was constitutionally, and otherwise, eminently calculated for the practice of his chosen profession. In the exercise of its high, and often unexpected and exhausting responsibilities, and in all the varying circumstances, and vicissitudes incident thereto, there was no one, with the lights then at command, better schooled or fitted to meet them all than he. In the obstetrical science, no one of his time, or perhaps since, in this locality, was, or is, his superior. He always appreciated the grave responsibilities surrounding him, possessed an intelligence that was equal to any emergency, and professional boldness that was ready for every necessity, the want of which is a serious detriment to the success of the most timid, but equally intelligent and conscientious practitioner.

In conversation he was peculiarly happy, entertaining and instructive, and in whatever principle was not concerned, he yielded ready obedience to social usage and custom. He had a faculty of satisfying his pride—for at heart he was a proud man—by honoring the avocation through which he had achieved the right to be what he was. His leisure time was either employed in general literature, or in keeping pace with the progress of his profession. Politically, he always had the best interests of the country at heart, although rarely or ever taking an active part in politics. Early in life he was a Federalist, later a Whig, and lastly a Republican. The government, in its earlier efforts to maintain itself as against England, always had his best efforts, and in its recent and successful attempt to maintain the supremacy of the Union and the constitution, was the recipient of his devoutest wishes. Two of his sons were in the service; one of them, the youngest, Captain Henry W. Trowbridge, of the Fifth Michigan, died while his regiment was in front of Yorktown. Dr. Trowbridge often expressed a desire to live to see the government recover its control over the rebellious States, and to assert, and, successfully, maintain its supremacy; but this was not allowed him. The religious faith and opinions of one who has satisfactorily closed his earthly mission, is always a delicate subject. It is too much the case that men are appreciated and judged in proportion as they are prospered in the goods of this world. Wealth too often gives its possessor a social position to which his deficiencies in moral and educational qualities do not entitle him. Religious belief and practice are very greatly dependent upon education, circumstances and the will of the individual. Faith is manifested in various ways; with some, it is quiet and unostentatious; with others, demonstrative and presuming. Dr. Trowbridge's parents were Puritans, and as his father's house was his home until he was quite a young man, it is fair to suppose there were no opportunities neglected in attempting to impress on his youthful mind their religious belief. Addison remarks that these early impressions are never entirely lost, although they may fail in their full fruition.

In conversation Dr. Trowbridge would often refer pleasantly and with profound respect to the rigid strictness of his most excellent and pious father, and also with the utmost affection to that of his devoted and pious mother. While clerk in Boston, he attended the only Episcopal Church in that city, then known as "King's Chapel;" and as his wife was educated in the Episcopal faith, he was thus influenced and confirmed in his early predilections. He was a communicant with this body before my remembrance. The truths and requirements of religion were received and discharged by him with an intelligence worthy of their importance. His belief was earnest, simple, honest, founded in the exercise of the high prerogative of reason. It was neither uncharitable nor sectarian. He was always ready to concede to others the right and the opportunity of an honest Christian difference, rebelling most stoutly against pretense and cant, whether it had an existence in religion, morals, or the medical profession. The Bible and the Book of Common Prayer for many years had a place on his table, and every day were the subject of his study.

In active life, his labors on the Sabbath were always arranged, when possible, so that those portions of the day devoted to public worship might not be subject to interruption. Judging him by what makes up the actualities of life, I am safe in claiming for him a reasonable effort to live acceptably to God and man.

Towards the close of his life, and after he was incapacitated for the duties of his profession, the subject of religion was a matter of serious consideration and frequent conversation. In his expressions he never made place for doubt. The near and certain approach of death was calmly awaited, although he expressed himself as having in an imperfect manner, and perhaps not according to the talents committed to him, completed his usefulness.

Fearing that he might be regarded as a burden, he was ready and prepared to give place to others physically and otherwise better prepared to accomplish the never ending duties of life, only expressing a desire to be exempted from that intense physical suffering which is often attendant upon the final departure of the soul. In this not unreasonable request he was Providentially gratified.

It was my practice to spend a portion of each of his latter days in his company. I left him on the eve of the 27th of September, 1862, in his usual health and spirits. Early the next morning I was suddenly, but not unexpectedly, called to find him in an insensible condition. He rallied for a short time, not sufficiently long to be able to give expression to his wishes, but so as to be conscious of his situation. Soon, with a smile on his countenance and without pain, he passed into that eternity in which we hope and believe the cares and distractions of life and the necessities of administering to the physical sufferings of humanity, are ended. The public, by private manifestations, the press, the medical profession, each in their own proper way, gave expression to the loss that society had been called on to sustain. This was the last of a long and useful life. If there is purity here below, then it was pure.

Mrs. Margaret Trowbridge, the widow of Dr. Josiah Trowbridge, died at Buffalo, October 24, 1863.

STEPHEN VAN RENSSELAER TROWBRIDGE, son of Luther and Elizabeth (Tillman) Trowbridge, born at Albany, New York, July 4, 1794, and was so named by his father, out of respect to the Patroon, Stephen Van Rensselaer, who was a friend and neighbor. When eight years old, he lost his father, and was adopted by a warm friend, General Vincent Matthews, a lawyer of Elmira, who entered him as a law clerk in his office. Subsequently the General abandoned the profession of the law for mercantile pursuits, and Stephen was his clerk in the store. He also had some fields adjoining the village, and Stephen manifested a fondness for farming, and soon learned to "handle a cradle and a scythe with the best of them." At the age of eighteen, at the commencement of the late war with England, he joined a regiment of three months' cavalry volunteers, and served with it, during the time of its enlistment, on the Niagara frontier. He subsequently married Elizabeth Conkling, of Horsehead, Chemung County, New York, who was born May 22, 1797. In October, 1821, he removed to Oakland County, Michigan, and turned his attention to agriculture. He knew enough of law to keep out of it, of accounts to state them handsomely, and, in a beautiful hand, which he retained until his death, and of farming, to make himself independent of fraud in its practice. These qualities were invaluable in a new country, and accordingly he was the recipient of the suffrages of his fellow citizens as long as he would consent to hold office. He was one of the members of the first Legislative Council, a body composed of thirteen, under the old territorial government, and afterwards, when the territory threw off her swaddling clothes and became a State, he was returned to the House of Representatives and the Senate. Meantime, he was frequently employed by the General Government in offices of responsibility and trust, connected with the Indian department, which, in those days, was of great extent, including seven States and Territories, and of great importance, having care of the disbursement of the treaty moneys paid for the extensive domain of Michigan and Wisconsin.

When the "copper fever" broke out on Lake Superior, the United States, the owners of the land, began by leasing the mines to companies, who worked them, and paid a royalty or proportion to the government. It became necessary for the United States to have a resident agent on Lake Superior, and he was, at one time, the appointed agent. He spent two summers there, but the business took such a turn that his office became a sinecure, and he wrote from Sault St. Marie to the department, so describing it, and advising the department to abolish it. He resigned his position at the same time. This was, to his intimate friends, who only knew of it, for he was no boaster, a source of some amusement, as being the only case, in their knowledge, where an incumbent recommended the abolition of his office, and then showed his sincerity by renouncing its emoluments; but it was also, to them, a source of pride that in him they had God's noblest work, an honest man. While he was thus occasionally occupied with the affairs of state, his main pursuit was that of a plain farmer. He worked industriously and lived frugally. He was a pattern of sobriety to all his neighbors, and his cheerfulness was so contagious, that he enlivened every circle. He was always ready, as a neighbor, with material aid, or as a counsellor, and frequently prepared the last wills of those about him with whom he was most intimate.

His character as a Christian brings us upon ground of great delicacy. As there were Pauls and Barnabases, Peters and Johns and James, in Apostolic days, evidencing the loveliness of the religion of Christ in all its phases, so, in these days, the diversity of gifts, and temperaments, of education and association, are so great that it is questionable how far one Christian is able to judge of another. But of this man, all who knew him as a Christian could unite in saying that they knew none more humble, more penitent, more truth loving, more kind, more forgiving, more generous, more true. His character was naturally very confiding, and, although he had, in his earlier years, more quickness of temper than was good for him, none knew it better or lamented it more than himself. Grace was constantly at work, refining, purifying his soul, and when God called him, he was an example of the patient Christian waiting for the summons. He became a member of the Presbyterian Church, at Pontiac, Oakland County, and was successively Deacon and Elder in the Church at Troy and Birmingham up to the time of his death, which took place at his residence, Strawberry Hill, March 1, 1859. The manner of his death has often called forth remark. He and his friends, Robert Stuart and General Henry Whiting, had often conferred on the subject of death, and all were agreed that, if consistent with God's will, they would like to die suddenly. General Whiting was first taken. He was at St. Louis, preparing to visit Detroit, and while packing his trunk, fell dead. Mr. Stuart was at Chicago. He took cold, coughed in the night, rose from his bed and went to his chair, in which he died during the night. Mr. Trowbridge had been out in the morning to visit an old neighbor, came in about noon, laid down on the sofa with a book as if to read, and in a few minutes was found in a fit of apoplexy, which, in a few hours, terminated his life.

" May we not think of thee as wearing
The star-like crown of light, and bearing,
Amid heaven's bright and blissful band,
The fadeless palm branch in thy hand;
And joining with a seraph's tongue
In that new song the Elder sung,
Ascribing to the blessed Giver
Thanksgiving, love and praise forever!"*

DEACON OTIS TROWBRIDGE, son of William and Anna (Woodward) Trowbridge, born January 18, 1808, married Elizabeth Bacon, daughter of Joseph Bacon, Esq., September 27, 1832, and settled in Newton. He was a carpenter by trade. Was a valued member of the Elliot Church, from the time of its organization; was chosen deacon, February 12, 1847, and superintendent of the Sabbath School for thirteen years in succession, when he resigned, on account of feeble health. At the time of his resignation a large concourse of people were assembled, when he gave an uncommonly interesting history of the School, from the time of its organization, in July, 1845. After some general remarks, on the management of the school, and the faithfulness of the teachers, Mr. Trowbridge made a series of parting remarks to the scholars and teachers. Turning then to the new superintendent, Mr. George W. Bacon, for many years a teacher, he welcomed him to the high and noble field to which he was called. Mr. Bacon made a well conceived and feeling address, in reply, and spoke with much earnestness to the teachers of the labor that was jointly before them. Immediately on the close of his address, his son, Master Frank Bacon, a child of the infant school, in an artless manner, presented to Mr. Trowbridge, on behalf of the infant scholars, a splendid royal octavo Bible, with the name, "Otis Trowbridge," on the cover, and within, the inscription, "A tribute of affection from the infant class of the Elliot Sabbath School to their Superintendent." Mr. Trowbridge, being taken by surprise, was much affected by this token of love; and hardly had made suitable acknowledgment, when Mr. Wm. J. Gilbert rose, in behalf of the whole school, and presented to Mr. Trowbridge a valuable purse of money, and an elegant Parlor Melodeon, valued at $100. It is but just to the Trowbridge family, to remind them that, by the persevering efforts of Mr. Otis Trowbridge, a valuable pamphlet, containing the descendants of Deacon James Trowbridge, the youngest son of the settler, was published in 1854, which has been of essential service to the compiler in making out this history. Mr. Trowbridge died January 20, 1862, beloved and lamented by all who knew him.

JOHN TOWNSEND TROWBRIDGE, son of Windsor S. and Rebecca (Willey) Trowbridge, born at Ogden, Monroe County, New York, September 18, 1827; led the life of a farmer's boy, until the age of sixteen, when he lost his father. He then resided with a sister in Lockport, and attended a classical school during the Winter of 1844-5. Hitherto he had enjoyed only the advantages of a District School, in a common country town, but being passionately fond of books, and devoting himself to study, out of school, he had learned to read and translate French and German with ease, without the assistance of a teacher. At this early period, he read and digested the works of the most noted of the English poetical and prose writers, and conceived the idea of himself becoming an author, and amid poverty and discouragements, sufficient to crush a man of ordinary mind, advanced, from step to step, until he holds a place in the front rank of American poets and novelists; is a stated contributor to several of the most popular magazines of the day, and is, at the present time, Senior Editor of the widely circulated monthly, styled "Our Young Folks," published by Field, Osgood & Co., Boston, Mass. Among the works brought out by Mr. Trowbridge, several of which have had a large sale, in the Old World and the New, are tales and essays, first published in the Boston magazines, and subsequently in volumes, under the name of "Paul Crayton," "Father Brighthopes," "Martin Merryvale," "Neighbor Jackwood," "Cudjoe's Cave," &c.; also, several poems of decided merit, recently published, under the title of "The Vagabonds and other Poems." In the Summer and Autumn of 1855, he visited Europe, spending most of the time in France and Italy. He also, in the Summer of 1865, and the subsequent Fall and Winter, made the tour of the South, visiting the principal cities and battle-fields of the States lately in rebellion; after which he published an octavo volume—"The South"—and about the same time, "Lucy Aclyn," and several other works of a later date. His contributions to "Our Young Folks" have rendered that magazine the most popular, of its kind, in the country. He married, May 9, 1860, Cornelia Warren, of Lowell, Mass., by whom he had two children. Mrs. Cornelia Trowbridge died March 23, 1864. His residence is upon the beautiful shores of Arlington Lake, seven miles from Boston.

WILLIAM PETIT TROWBRIDGE, son of Stephen Van Rensselaer and Elizabeth (Conklin) Trowbridge, born in Oakland County, Michigan, May 25, 1828, entered the Military Academy, at West Point, at the age of 16 years and 1 month. He stood at the head of his class on the rolls of the Academy, at each annual examination during the four years course at that institution, and graduated with the highest honors in 1848. During the last year of his course he acted as Instructor in Chemistry. At his graduation, in 1848, he received a commission in the Corps of Engineers of the United States army. During the same year he was sent back to the Military Academy as assistant to Professor Bartlett in the Department of Philosophy, where he remained during three years. In 1851 he was detailed for duty on the United States Coast Survey, under Professor Bache, which position he occupied for five years. During this period he was engaged, first, in the triangulation of the coast of Maine, then in the survey of the James and Appomattox rivers, in Virginia, and, in 1853, he was sent to the coast of California to conduct a series of tidal and magnetic observations, extending from San Diego to Puget Sound, a distance of thirteen hundred miles. This duty occupied three years. After his return from California he was offered a Professorship in the University of Michigan, which he accepted, resigning his commission in the army for that purpose. At the end of a year he returned to the Coast Survey, at the solicitation of Professor Bache, and remained in the Survey as his assistant until the breaking out of the rebellion. At the beginning of the war he was selected by General Totten, late Engineer in Chief of the army, to take charge of the branch office of the Engineer Department, in New York City, where he was charged with the construction of fortifications on the East River, including the new fort at Hallet's Point, opposite Fort Schuyler, the alteration and repairs of Fort Schuyler, and the alteration and repairs of the fortifications of Governor's Island. He was also charged with the construction of pontoon bridges for the armies in the field, supplying them with materials and tools for conducting siege operations, and for building temporary fortifications. He had charge also of the supplies of materials—granite, brick, lumber, iron—and machinery for the permanent fortifications of the Atlantic coast, from Maine to New Orleans. In 1865, he was offered, without solicitation, the position of Vice President of the Novelty Iron Works, the largest manufacturing establishment in New York City, an establishment devoted to the construction of marine engines and heavy machinery of all kinds. This position he occupied until the works were finally closed, on account of the falling off of the steamship building business, and after remaining nearly a year, to assist in closing up the affairs of the works, he was offered and accepted the appointment of a Professorship in Yale College, in the Sheffield Scientific School, which position he now occupies. Resides in New Haven. He married Lucy Parkman, of Savannah, Georgia, April 21, 1857, by whom he has had eight children.

NATHAN COLE, son of Charles D. and Sarah W. (Trowbridge) Cole, was born November 22, 1842. On the 21st of April, 1861, at the age of eighteen, he enlisted, as a private, in Company C, of the Fourth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served with the regiment in the States of Maryland and Virginia, during which period he was appointed Corporal, and afterwards, Sergeant. On the 20th of August, he was discharged from the Fourth Wisconsin, to enable him to accept a commission of First Lieutenant of Company R, of the Twentieth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He served in that regiment until February 27, 1863, when he was mustered out of service, for permanent disability, resulting from a gun shot wound received through the elbow joint of his right arm, in a charge on a Rebel battery, at the battle of Prairie Grove, Arkansas. He was taken prisoner, December 7, 1862, and recaptured, December 8, 1862. On the 17th of September, 1863, he was commissioned by President Lincoln First Lieutenant in the Veteran Reserve Corps, commanding the Company at St. Louis, Missouri, and Camp Chase, Ohio. In December, 1863, he was assigned to duty, with the Fifteenth Regiment of the Veteran Reserve Corps, at Camp Douglas, at Chicago, Ill.; served in capacities of lieutenant commanding company, and as acting adjutant and acting regimental quarter-master while at that camp. In the Spring of 1865, while stationed at Chicago, he received a commission from Governor Fairchild, of Wisconsin, as Major of the Forty-eighth Volunteer Infantry, but declined the appointment, and in May, 1865, was promoted to the office of Captain of the Veteran Reserve Corps, and assigned to duty, as Captain Commanding Company E of the Twenty-third Regiment Corps, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. In July, 1865, he was ordered, with his Company, to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was stationed until December of the same year, when the Company was disbanded, and he was ordered home to "await orders." In May, 1866, he was ordered on duty, as an agent of the Freedman's Bureau, in Southern Arkansas, and, while acting in that capacity, was promoted to Major, by Brevet, "for faithful and meritorious service during the war;" also appointed Lieutenant in the Eleventh United States Infantry, but not accepted by the Surgeon of the Board of Examiners, on account of the wounded right arm rendering him unfit for active service. Was discharged June 6, 1867. He married Harriet A. Manville, May 5, 1864.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The following family of Trowbridges has been found that I have been unable to connect with the families given in this volume, although they undoubtedly sprung from the same common ancestor. Those now living can trace no farther back than their grand-father, and of him they know nothing but his name:—

MATTHEW THOMAS TROWBRIDGE, resided in Danbury, and had a son, Matthew, born about 1769, married about 1789, and died in Salisbury, Conn., in 1822. He had thirteen children.

APPENDIX.

NOTE A.

A brief sketch of Taunton, in Somersetshire, the birth-place and early home of Thomas Trowbridge, the Primitive Settler.

“Taunton has ever been a principal town in the county of Somerset. Before the modern improvements were introduced, it was deemed well built. Its streets are spacious, as it extends over a considerable extent of ground. The houses, even in the middle of it, are furnished with good outlets, which contribute much to the pleasantness and salubrity of the town, as well as to the convenience of its inhabitants. It is a mile long, from east to west, and its streets have a gradual descent to the river. It stands in a fertile and extensive vale, and is called by Camden one of the eyes of the county. The county all around, is beautified with green meadows, abounds in delightful orchards and gardens; is enriched with wood, and peopled with numerous villages, so as to exhibit to the eye of the spectator, who approaches the town, a charming scene. The county in itself, though, in the Winter, moist and marshy, is supposed, by some, to derive its name (Somersetshire) from the summerlike temperature of the air. The part of it in which Taunton is situated has, if not an exclusive, yet a peculiar claim to the excellent qualities ascribed to the whole. On account of its fertility, the peasantry used to boast that it was so fruitful with the Zun and Zoil, alone, as to need no manuring. This county is called by the inhabitants, Taunton Dean, that is the vale of Taunton, and from the high conceit of its pre-eminence above other counties, hath arisen a beautiful proverb—“Where should I be born, else, but Taunton Dean,”—as if it were a disparagement to be born in any other place; and none in England, nay, in the whole world, were to be compared with it. Dr. Amory, a native of this town, published, in 1724, a beautiful poem descriptive of the town.” (Vide James Savage’s History of Taunton, page 3.)

NOTE B.

TROWBRIDGE CHARITY.

[A gift from Thomas Trowbridge, uncle of Thomas Trowbridge, the Primitive Settler, to the poor of the Church of St. Mary Magdalen, in Taunton, Somersetshire, England.]

“On the 4th of December, 1614, Thomas Trowbridge, the elder, of Taunton, merchant tailor, granted, and assigned, unto ten trustees, two closes, or pieces of ground, called Tunaways, the one consisting of five acres, and the other being one, and lying in West Monkton, for the residue of one thousand years, commencing on the 28th of September, 1613, upon trust, that out of the rents and profits of the said closes, then worth six pounds per annum, clear to pasture, there should be paid, on St. Andrew's Day, yearly, unto the churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary Magdalen, six pounds, whereof they were to pay, on that day, yearly, to the churchwardens and overseers of St. James', in or near Taunton, forty shillings, to be by them distributed among forty of the poorest, oldest, and most honest, impotent poor of that parish, by a shilling a-piece, the distribution to be made on St. Thomas' Day, before Christmas; and within a month after such distribution, the said overseers of St. James', to give a note of the names of those that received the said benevolence to the churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary Magdalen, aforesaid.

“And that the residue, being four pounds, should be distributed by the said churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary Magdalen, amongst eighty of the like poor of that parish, by one shilling a-piece, the same day, and a note kept of the names of the said poor, and such names delivered in at Easter, before the Constables of the borough of Taunton, two or more of the trustees being called in. And if the profits amounted to more than six pounds, the residue to be, in like manner, distributed among the poor of Taunton, St. Mary Magdalen, and to be accounted for as aforesaid. And if the profits should not amount to six pounds, then a proportional abatement to be made on each parish, and the residue to be distributed as aforesaid. And when the number of trustees should come to four, then a new deed to be made to some person or persons, who should assign their interest back again to these four, and as many more as they should think expedient, the major part to be the most sufficient and honest inhabitants of the town of Taunton; so that the term might be preserved to the uses aforesaid. And that this gift should go on to the increase of the relief of the poor, and not to ease any rate or taxation. And the donor desired that the poor should be assembled on St. Thomas' Day, at Divine service, at their respective parish churches, except such as could not; and after the distribution made, the donors name mentioned, and they put in mind to thank God for His mercy.”

“In the return of charitable donations, in 1787, this benefaction is said to produce the annual sum of eight pounds, and the trustees were Joseph Harman, William Pring, and Thomas Locke.” (Vide History of Taunton, England, published in 1822.)

NOTE C.

POWER OF ATTORNEY FROM THOMAS TROWBRIDGE, THE SETTLER, TO HIS THREE SONS.

“To all Christian people to whom this present writing shall come greeting,—Know ye that I, Thomas Trowbridge, of Taunton, in the county of Somerset, Gent., do hereby make, ordain, constitute and depute; and in my place, and stead, put my three sons, Thomas Trowbridge and William Trowbridge, of New Haven, and James Trowbridge, of Dorchester, in the Bay, in New England, in the parts of America, beyond the seas, to be my true and lawful attorneys, jointly, and severally, for me, and in my name, to ask, sue for, levy, require, recover, and receive all and singular, my estate, houses, lots, goods, cattle, and chattles whatsoever, which I left in trust in New England, aforesaid, with Henry Gibbons, sometimes, my servant, or do otherwise belong unto me, and upon detaining thereof, or of any part or parcel thereof, to arrest, attach, call to an account, sue, implead, and imprison the said Henry Gibbons, and all and every other person and persons whatsoever, in whose hands, custody, or possession, my said estate, houses, lot, goods, cattle and chattels, whatsoever, is, are, or have, or hath been, in any way, or course of law, or equity, and the same suit or suits, to prosecute, and pursue, to judgement, sentence, and final execution, until recovery shall be had, of my said estate, houses, lot, goods, cattle and chattels whatsoever, with all costs and damages, to be had for detaining the same. And upon receipt thereof, as my said attorneys, or any, or either of them, shall agree for and accept, by way of composition, the person or persons, so by my said attorneys, or any, or either of them, sued and imprisoned, out of prison, to release and discharge, and also to make, seal, and deliver acquitances, releases or other sufficient discharges, to, and for the same, or any part thereof. And I do hereby give and grant unto my said attorneys, jointly and severally, my full and whole power in about the premises, and by the aforesaid, or any other lawful ways, or means whatsoever, to get in and recover my said estate, houses, lot, goods, cattle and chattels whatsoever, in as full and ample manner in every respect, to all intents, constructions and purposes, as I myself might or could do, in the same, if I were there, personally present, ratifying, allowing, and confirming, whatsoever my said attorneys, or any, or either of them shall lawfully do, or cause to be done, in the premises by virtue of these presents. And I do also hereby order and appoint that all and whatsoever of my said estate, houses, lot, goods, cattle or chattels, whatsoever shall be recovered and received by my said attorneys, or any, or either of them, shall be had, kept and enjoyed by my said three sons, Thomas, William, and James, equally divided between them to their own use and behoof, without any account to (be) rendered unto me for the same. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, the nineteenth day of January, in the fourteenth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, et anno gr. and 1663.

NOTE D.

WILL OF THOMAS TROWBRIDGE (ELDEST SON OF THE PRIMITIVE SETTLER)
NOVEMBER 11, 1701.

“I, Thomas Trowbridge, Sen., of New Haven, in the Colony of Connecticut, merchant, being sick and weak in body, but of sound and perfect mind and memory—praise, therefore, be given to Almighty God—do make and ordain this my last will and testament, in manner and form following, that is to say: first, and principally, I commend my soul into the hands of Almighty God, hoping through the merits, death, and passion of my Saviour, Jesus Christ, to have full and free pardon and forgiveness of all my sins, and to inherit everlasting life; and my body I commit to the earth, to be decently buried, at the discretion of my executors hereafter named, and as touching the disposition of all such temporal estate, as it hath pleased Almighty God to bestow upon me, I give and dispose thereof as followeth:

1st. I will that all my just debts and funeral charges shall be paid and discharged.

2d. I give unto my dear and loving wife, Hannah Trowbridge, one hundred and ten pounds, current money, also eighty pounds in provisions, or in goods, if they will suit her occasions best. Also, I give the use or improvement of the house, barn, together with the home lot on which they stand, with all appurtenance thereunto belonging (the said home lot formerly belonging to Henry Gibbons) the aforesaid house to be completely finished, by the executors hereafter named, who are also obliged to make a well and pump convenient for the use of said house, to have and to hold the use or improvement of said housing, home lot, well, and all appurtenances, during her natural life; provideth she doth not marry, but if she marrieth, then my will is that she shall hold the use or improvement of said housing, home lot, well, and appurtenances, as aforesaid, only one year from, and next after her marriage, (to provide for herself) which year being expired, said housing, home lot and appurtenances, shall return to two of my children hereafter mentioned. Item, a silver tumbler, a silver quart tankard, a silver porringer, a silver cup, six silver spoons (three of the bigger sort, and three of the lesser sort), a copper kettle, an iron pot, a brass pot, a new bell-metal skillett, six pewter dishes, which she shall or may choose, one dozen of plates, a jack and spitt, and the irons they run in, which my wife brought with her, a little brass kettle, one trunk, which my wife brought, and another seal skin trunk of mine, two feather beds, with bedstead, which we lie on, with the furniture belonging to them, four pair of homespun sheets, four pair of pillow bears, four pillows, six leathern chairs, six turkee worked cushions, four turned chairs, a pair of brass andirons, a pair of iron andirons in Caleb's chamber, a pair of iron tongs, an iron fire shovel, in our bed chamber, one dozen of fine, and one dozen of coarse napkins, one dozen towels, one table below, with drawers, one table in the bed chamber, two wide home-spun table cloths, one diaper table cloth, one coarse table cloth, a warming pan, a frying pan, two pewter basins, one of the large, six pewter porringers, a high joint stool, a little silver fork, a round brass pan, one book of Mr. Shepherd's Ten Virgins, my Dutch case, and the square bottles belonging to it, a silver bottle, a pair of trammels, and a pair of pot hooks, a lignum vitæ mortar and pestle, one brass and one iron candlestick, and iron goose and smoothing iron, an iron kettle, two chamber pots, a new pewter salt-seller, a pillion and cloth, a chest that was the *Major's, two good meal bags, a brewing tub, a washing tub, one firkin of soap, a cow. Also, my will is, and I hereby give and bequeath to my said wife, from the time of my decease, for the space of six years, fully to be expired, in case she continues a widow, viz., two hundred weight of pork, two hundred weight of beef, ten bushels of rye, ten bushels of Indian corn, five bushels of wheat, ten bushels of barley mault, or other mault equivalent thereunto, ten load of wood, all to be delivered yearly in the several years of said term, at the mansion house of my said wife, in New Haven, by my executors. And, furthermore, my will is that until the mansion-house intended for my said wife be duly finished by my executors, as is herewith ordered, she and my daughter, Hannah, shall remain in my present mansion-house, and be maintained at the charge of my executors; the above legacies to be accounted and accepted by my said dear wife, in consideration and lieu of her whole interest, according to law, in my whole estate, both personal and real, and to be at her absolute dispose.

Whereas, I have formerly given to my son, John Trowbridge, deceased, his heirs and assigns, partly in that house and homsetead, which he died, possessed of, and partly in other estate, to the value of five hundred pounds, and have since been at charges to support his widow and children, I therefore may not, without wrong to my other children, make addition by way of portion to above said charges, yet, as a testimony of my fatherly affection for that bereaved, afflicted family, I will and bequeath five pounds in silver, to be paid to my daughter, Collins, on my decease, she then giving a full discharge to my executors of and from all demands of my estate, personal and real, whatsoever, coming into my possession at any time heretofore, by purchase or inheritance, and ten pounds in like silver to her daughter, Ann, at marriage, or at the age of eighteen years. These several to be paid by my executors.

3dly. Whereas, I have bestowed sundry parcels of land and meadow on my children already married, viz., Thomas Trowbridge, Mr. Richard Rosewell, and Mr. John Hodshon, which said parcels of land are already made over, or hereby are assigned and confirmed, to them, their heirs and assigns, and not as part of their portions, but in testimony of my affection to each of them. I therefore, in like manner, do hereby will and bequeath unto my children, not yet married, in like affection to them, the following parcels of land, not to be accounted as part of their respective portions, viz.:

To my son Caleb, his heirs and assigns, I will and bequeath the farm on the east side, which farm I bought of the Indians; also, I give him all the housing, edifices, fences, and appurtenances, to the same belonging, with these parcels of meadow following, viz., that parcel of meadow containing now about four acres, commonly called Eley's meadow, situate on the Indian side; fourteen acres of meadow lying in the fresh meadow, situate on the road that leads to the iron works; one parcel of English meadow on the east side, which I bought of the Indians, two acres of salt marsh meadow in the Indian field, and five acres of meadow adjoining upon his brother Thomas' meadow near the Black Rock.

To my son Daniel, his heirs and assigns, I will and bequeath all my third division lying on the west side, being about two hundred and thirty acres, be it more or less.

To my daughter, Hannah, her heirs and assigns, I will and bequeath all the farm lying adjacent to the three mile brook, the west side of Milford road, formerly Major Nash's farm, both that part I received with my present wife, and that other part I since purchased.

Furthermore, whereas, I have already given to my surviving children, married, each of them, two hundred and fifty pounds, reckoned as pay current; my will, therefore, is that my other children, viz., Caleb, Daniel, and Hannah, shall receive, each of them, likewise, two hundred and fifty pounds, in pay as part of their portions, to make them even with my aforesaid married children, viz., as followeth:—

1. Item, I give to my son Caleb, his heirs and assigns, fifty pounds, current money, two silver forks, a silver caudal cup, three large silver spoons, four smaller silver spoons, the prices of said pieces of plate, together with the fifty pounds, current money, aforesaid, being doubled, shall be accounted a part of said two hundred and fifty pounds, and what remains to complete the sum shall be taken out of my estate, according to apprisement in the inventory.

1. Itt. I give to my son Daniel, his heirs and assigns, fifty pounds, current money, having lately, in several payments, given to my said son Daniel, the said sum of fifty pounds, current silver money, I do furthermore will and bequeath to him two silver forks, a great silver tankard, three long silver spoons, four smaller silver spoons, which pieces of plate and sum of money aforesaid, shall be doubled, and accounted in part of said two hundred and fifty pounds; further, to make up the said two hundred and fifty pounds, I give and bequeath unto my said son Daniel the home lot, formerly William Gibbon's lot, lying between John and Joseph Morris' home lots. Itt. Two acres of land, in oyster shell field, bounded on the widow How's land, on the east, and by the highway north and south, to him, his heirs, and assigns forever, at such prices as they shall be set at in the inventory, and what shall yet be wanting of said two hundred and fifty pounds, my will is that it shall be paid to him out of my estate, according to the apprisement in the inventory.

Itt. I give to my daughter fifty pounds, current money, two silver forks, a silver beacer, a little silver porringer, a silver tumbler, a silver dram cup, three large silver spoons, two silver forks, and one little silver spoon-fork, two silver spoons, one kettle, six knobbed silver spoons, three and a half acres of meadow, formerly Major Nash's meadow, lying above the West bridge, one acre of meadow at the Oyster Point, seven acres of upland at the Mill Hill, three acres and a half of land by the Mill lane, formerly Major Nash's, three acres and a quarter of pasture land, lying by the Mill river, six acres of land in the Neck, all which parcels of land and meadow were formerly Major Nash's, and to be accounted to her at the prices they were set at in said Nash's inventory, the sum of said apprisement, together with double prices of plate and sum of money, as aforesaid, to be accounted part and parcel of said two hundred pounds pay, and the remainder, if any be, to make up the sum, to be taken out of my estate, according to apprisement in my inventory, and to be delivered to her mother, to be kept for the use of said daughter, until she come to lawful age, or marriage, and, in case my wife die before my daughter Hannah attain the age of twenty-one years, then my will is that my said daughter shall have the use and improvement of said house, home lot, and appurtenances, granted to my wife during her widowhood, as aforesaid, until she comes to the age of twenty-one years, as aforesaid, and then I give and bequeath the said house, barn, home lot, and all appurtenances, to my sons Caleb and Daniel Trowbridge, their heirs and assigns forever. My will, furthermore, is that my executors pay to my wife, or who else shall have the care of my daughter Hannah, ten pounds a-year, in provision value, out of my estate, towards the bringing up of my said daughter, until she arrive at the age of sixteen years. My will, further, is that, if it please God that my daughter Hannah dieth before her mother, and before she be capable by law to make her will, that then all the real estate bequeathed to my said daughter, be, and remain in the use and improvement of her said mother, for her sole profit during her natural life, and after to return to my sons, in equal proportions, and the remainder of the personal estate given to my said daughter, I leave to my wife's discretion to dispose of to which of my children she please.

Itt. I give to my son Thomas Trowbridge, his heirs and assigns, forever, forty acres of wilderness land, formerly the Rev'd Mr. Samuel Street's, of Wallingford, twenty-five acres, third division land, formerly widow Hotchkiss', Edward Kalies, third division lot, and Henry Gibbon's third division lot, twelve acres of meadow and alder ground, be it more or less, upon the east river, near the brick kiln point, also a parcel of salt marsh meadow lying near the black rock, the bounds and quantities of said parcels of land and meadow being more particularly expressed in my deeds of gift to my said son, which above said parcels of land and meadow to my said son, Thomas, is not to be accounted as part of his portion.

Itt. I give to my son-in-law, Richard Rosewell, his heirs and assigns, forever, (not to be accounted as part of his portion,) one hundred and ten acres of land, formerly belonging to Ensign Munson, situate on the east side; also twenty-six acres of land, formerly Samuel Humerstone's; twenty-six acres of land, formerly John Calver's third division land, on west side, and two acres of salt marsh meadow, joining to Caleb Trowbridge's meadow, in the Indian field, the bounds of said parcels being expressed particularly in my deed of gift to my said son.

Itt. I give to my son, Mr. John Hodshon, his heirs and assigns, forever, (not to be accounted as part of his portion) two hundred and fifty acres of land, formerly belonging to Mr. James Bishop, deceased, situate in Pilgrim's harbor, and four acres of meadow lying at Malbon's Cove, which was Nathanael Kimberly's meadow.

Itt. I give to each of my grand-children, surviving at my decease (to whom I have not expressly, in this my will, already given) twenty shillings, in silver, to each, among whom I intend Mehetabel Collins.

Itt. I give to my two daughters, * Elizabeth Rosewell and Elizabeth Hodshon, ten pounds, to each, in current money. These several proportions, thus made even, as aforesaid, my will is that then the remainder of all my estate, both real and personal whatsoever, be equally divided to, and among all my present surviving children, and I devise, nominate, and appoint my three sons, viz., Thomas Trowbridge, Caleb Trowbridge, and Daniel Trowbridge, to be executors of this my last will and testaments by me heretofore made.

* This should be, evidently, Lydia.

In witness whereof, I, the said Thomas Trowbridge, Sen'r, to this, my last will and testament, (being contained in four sheets of paper), have hereunto set my hand and seal, this eleventh day of November, in the year of our Lord, 1701, in the 13th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord, William the 3d, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, etc.

THOMAS TROWBRIDGE, SEN., [SEAL.]

Signed, sealed, and published, to be the last will and testament of said Mr. Thomas Trowbridge, Senior, in the presence of us witnesses,

JONATHAN ATWATER,
RUTHERFORD HALL,
MOSES MANSFIELD.

Approved, September 14th, 1702.

NOTE E.

WILL OF MRS. HANNAH TROWBRIDGE, 20TH JAN., 1708.

In the name of God, amen, I, Hannah Trowbridge, of New Haven, widow, being weak of body, but of sound understanding and memory, and not knowing how short my time may be, do make and declare this to be my last will and testament.

Imprimis, I give my soul to God, who gave it, hoping, in the merits of Jesus Christ, my blessed Redeemer, for a glorious resurrection, and my body to the dust, to be decently buried, at the discretion of my executors herein-after named.

And as for that temporal estate that God hath bestowed me with, my will is, after my just debts and funeral charges be paid, I give unto my loving sister, Mary Payne, my best silk hood and best silk scarf, also my best black suit.

Itt. I give unto my loving sister, Sarah Yale, my next best black suit, also a colored suit and two thin shifts.

Itt. I give to my dear daughter, Hannah Trowbridge, two red petticoats, and two white petticoats, and one damask petticoat, and all my bought shifts, and all my clothing that is in my seal skin trunk, and what other clothing of mine she shall see cause to take, and the remainder of my clothing I give unto my loving sister, Mary Payne; also I give unto her, said Mary Payne, ten pounds of my inventoried estate. Also, I give unto my cousin [niece], Sarah Payne, ten pounds of my inventoried estate, to be paid at the discretion of my executors. And all the rest of my estate, of what nature or kind soever, I give unto my dear daughter, Hannah Trowbridge, and to the heirs of her body, and if she die without issue, then the estate to return to my sister, Mary Payne, and her daughter, if living, and if they be dead, then to return to my kinsman, Mr. John Alling, and his heirs.

And my will is, and I do appoint and desire my loving kinsman, Mr. John Alling, and the Reverend James Pierpont, and the Reverend Mr.

Joseph Moss, of Derby, immediately after my decease, to take care of my dear daughter, Hannah Trowbridge, and also of her estate, desiring the Rev'd Mr. James Pierpont to take into his family, and under his care, my dear daughter, Hannah, and also my Mulatto maid.

And I do hereby nominate and appoint Mr. John Alling, aforesaid, sole executor of this my last will and testament, revoking all former wills and testaments by me at any time made.

The 20th day of Jan., A. D. 1707.

HANNAH H. T. TROWBRIDGE,

NOTE G.

WILL OF DEACON JAMES TROWBRIDGE, YOUNGEST SON OF THOMAS TROWBRIDGE, THE SETTLER.

In the name of God, amen, the 17th day of June, Anno Domini 1709, I, James Trobridge, of Newton, in the county of Middlesex, within the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, deacon, being of weakly body, and under the decay of nature, but of disposing mind and memory, thanks be to Almighty God for it, and knowing that it is appointed unto man once to die, do make this my last will and testament, that is to say, first of all, I give and recommend my soul into the hands of God that gave it, and my body I commit to the earth, to be buried in Christian manner, at the discretion of my executors after-named, having hope in Christ that, by the mighty power of God, I shall receive the same again at the general resurrection, and inherit everlasting life.

And touching such worldly estate as it hath pleased God to bless me withal, I give and dispose of the same in the following manner:

Imprimis, my will is that my debts and funeral charges shall be paid by my executors out of my estate.

Item, I give unto Margaret, my dearly beloved wife, £10 annually during her natural life, such room or rooms in my dwelling-house, and such other things as is to be done for her, mentioned and specified in the conditions of our obligation, bearing date 20 May, 1709, under the hand and seal of my son, James Trobridge; and further, I do give unto her one-third part of my household goods or stuff, as she shall make choice of it, to be at her disposal; and further, I do give unto my said loving wife £15 in, or as money, to dispose of by will to whom she please.

Item, I do give unto my eldest son, John Trobridge, £60, which he hath already received, as appeareth by my books.

Item, I do give unto my second son, Thomas Trowbridge, the eldest son of Margaret, my now beloved wife, £60, part of which is in land, and part in moveables, already received by him.

Item, I give to my third son, James Trobridge, the sum of £30, already received.

Item, I give to my fourth son, William Trobridge, £30, already received by him.

Item, I give to my youngest son, Caleb, all the cost and charge that hath been to bring him up to learning, and my will is that he shall be kept at the college still, at the charge of my estate, until he hath taken his first degree, and that he shall have £5, in money, within one year after.

Item, I do give to every one of my daughters, viz., Elizabeth Mirrick, Mindwell Fuller, Margaret Stone, Thankful Ward, Mary Stedman, Hannah Greenwood, Deliverance Ward, so much as will make up what they have already had, the sum of £30, their several receivings appearing upon my books; and likewise, I do give unto the children and heirs of my daughter, Experience Wilson, deceased, so much as will make up what hath been already received, the sum of £30, which such sums to be paid to my daughter, not to be paid until it be done by an obligation from my son James Trobridge.

My will is that, whereas Abigail, my youngest daughter, hath not yet received anything toward her portion, out of my estate, yet, she shall have her wedding, when she shall marry, bought or provided for her by my executors, and out of my estate, over and above her £30, which said £30, shall be paid her, viz., £20 thereof on her marriage day, and £10 within 7 years and one day month after the decease of me, said James Trobridge and of Margaret, my beloved wife; and, further, my will is that, in case my daughter Abigail do prove weakly in her unmarried state, that there shall be allowed her, out of my estate, what my executors and trustees of this my will shall think fitting and needful for her help and assistance, no deducting anything from her portion of the £30, of what is so spent, there be not enough besides, every one of my other children shall bear a share, proportionable, out of what they have yet to receive. And my will is, that what rights of land I have in the town of Dorchester, that came by my own father, Thomas, shall be equally divided to, and amongst all my children, and that all the rights to any lands that came by my father-in-law, Major Humphrey Atherton, shall be divided amongst my first wife's children and heirs.

I do give unto our faithful and reverend Pastor, Mr. Nehemiah Hobart, as a token of my love and respect for him, £5, in money, to be paid by my executors; and, further, I do give him 20s., in money, to buy vessels for the church, in Newton, for the use of the Sacrament, which, with the £5 to Mr. Hobart, shall be paid within one year after my decease.

And I do appoint my beloved brother-in-law, Abraham Jackson, and my son, Thomas Trobridge, to be my executors, and my dear and loving wife to be my executrix to this my last will and testament, and appoints his truly and well beloved friends, John Ward and John Hide, to be overseers of his will, and in case of any emergency, or difference shall arise, then they shall have full power to decide, determine, and issue the same according to the true intent and meaning of this my last will; and, whereas, there is a tract of land at Oakhill yet undisposed of, I do fully empower the executors to sell the same for defraying all necessary charges.

EBENEZER WINSTON, } Witnesses.
JOHN STAPLES, }

JAMES TROWBRIDGE, [SEAL.]

The following codicil to the Will of Deacon James Trowbridge was added at a later date:—

Whereas, I, James Trowbridge, of Newton, in the county of Middlesex, in New England, Deacon, also yeoman, have made and ordained my last Will and Testament, bearing date June 7th, 1709, I do hereby ratify and confirm my last will in the several clauses and articles therein contained, according to the true intent and meaning thereof; and, whereas, in one article of my last will, it is expressed that I do give to every one of my daughters, viz., Elizabeth Mirrick, Mindwell Fuller, Margaret Stone, Thankful Ward, Mary Stedman, Hannah Greenwood, Deliverance Ward, so much as will make up what they have already received, the sum of thirty pounds to each of my said daughters, or their respective heirs. And, further, my will is that such part of the sum of one hundred and seventy pounds, mentioned and expressed in the condition of one obligation under the hand and seal of my son, James Trowbridge, now dead, bearing date May 20, 1709, as is not otherwise made payable by my late will, or actually paid by myself or Margaret, my wife, in the term of one or either of our natural lives, be paid in unto my executor, named in my last will, and the remainder (if any be) to be equally divided among all my children, named in my will, or their heirs, part and part alike. And my will is, ye same be paid in unto my sd executors by the heirs or administrators the estate of my son, James Trowbridge, deceased, within the space of three years next after the decease of me, the said James Trowbridge and Margaret, my wife; and whereas, the Rev. Mr. Hobart is dead, my will and meaning is that the legacies to him do cease, determine, and become void. And lastly, my will is that the codicil be reputed, held, and observed as part and parcel of my last will and testament. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, this first day of December, one thousand seven hundred and fifteen, annoque, R. R. Georgii Magna Britannia ye Secundo. James Trowbridge, I. T., his mark and seal, signed, sealed, and published, as by the above-named James Trowbridge, as part of his last will and testament, in the presence of us, who subscribed our names as witnesses in the testator's presence.

NOTE I.

Letters from Wm. R. Trowbridge to his father, Thomas R. Trowbridge, of New Haven.

DEAR FATHER,

AT SEA, October 6th, 1863.

In compliance with your request, I commence my letters with expectation of continuance of them during my tour.

We have now been out from New York just ten days, and have made a fine run of 2,500 miles. We hope to make the southern coast of Ireland this afternoon, arriving at Queenstown early in the evening. We shall remain said trust, and this will, with the said codicil as part thereof, is proved and approved, and the administration thereof is committed to the said executors, faithfully to admister the same accordingly.

Witness my hand and seal of office, die and anno supradicto, and trust is also exhibited.

NOTE H.

WILL OF MARGARET TROWBRIDGE, WIDOW OF DEACON JAMES TROWBRIDGE.

In the name of God, amen, the 27th day of September, 1717, I, Margaret Trowbridge, of Newton, widow, being of perfect mind and memory, thanks be given unto God for it, but calling into mind the mortality of my body, and knowing that it is appointed for all men once to die, do make and ordain this my last will and testament; that is to say, I give and recommend my soul into the hands of God that gave it, and my body I recommend to the earth, to be buried in a decent Christian burial, at the discretion of my executors, nothing doubting but, at the resurrection, I shall receive the same again by the mighty power of God, and as touching such worldly estate as it hath pleased God to bless me withall in this life, I give, devise, and dispose of the same in manner and form following :—

In primis, I give to them that shall be at the charge of my funeral 15 pounds, given me in my husband's will.

Item, I give to my grand-daughter, Experience Wilson, my bed and bedding, to pay her the 5 pounds mentioned in her indenture, if I should die before her time is out. Item, I give to my children, even such as are named in my will, namely, to Thomas Trowbridge, William Trowbridge, Caleb Trowbridge, the heirs of Experience Wilson, deceased, Deliverance Ward, and Abigail Greenwood, all my household goods, debts, and moveable effects; I likewise ordain, appoint, and constitute my loving brother, Abraham Jackson, and my well beloved son, William Trowbridge, to be executors of this my last will and testament. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal, the day and year above written,

MARGARET TROWBRIDGE,

The account of William Trowbridge, Executor, of the Last Will and Testament of Mrs. Margaret Trowbridge, late of Newton, in the county of Middlesex, widow, deceased:—

blowing so hard that no sails could be kept on the ship to steady her, she rolled fearfully, but was steered straight, and like Paul, of yore, we let her drive. We went on, on, on, hoping that the wind and sea would fall; but no, the sea increased, and with it the wind. This severe gale lasted three long and gloomy days and nights. A night in a gale in the Bay of Biscay, is awful—the passengers all sea-sick, except myself and two others. I could not help thinking, then, of all at home out of harm's way, and I tossed "in the Bay of Biscay O." The first land we saw was Cape Finisterre, in Spain. We then continued southward, and reaching Portugal, passing Vigo, Oporto, and Aveido, near where Wellington landed with his troops. We have also passed Lisbon, on the Tagus; the coast is bold and steep, and covered with cork trees. The view is grand. It seemed rather singular for me to be ploughing the very waters that the Spanish Armada crossed years ago to desolate England, and returned so soon with disabled ships and diminished forces. That land, too, just off there, is the very same that the Moors held for centuries, when Ferdinand and Isabella reigned, the greatest and best of Spain's monarchs.

Ponce de Leon, too, achieved his glorious titles and deeds there; there, too, were fought those terrible and decisive battles between the "Crescent and the Cross." I tell you it seems strange—like living in another world—to be where a nation counts its greatness by centuries, and where the lands, and even the seas, are replete with historic interest. I intend to give you an account of the voyage—therefore the thoughts will, of course, be rambling.

Yesterday was a day which will never fade from my memory, as being the day when I saw Gibraltar and passed the Straits. I was on deck at 7 a. m., and we were then off Tangiers, and entering the Straits. The Spanish coast was on our left—bold, steep, and dotted with houses and olive trees. The land was the most undulating I have ever seen. The view was magnificent. Old Spanish watch towers were scattered along the coast, which were doubtless built by those Moors who ruled Spain for centuries. Tangiers soon opened to view behind a high neck of land; it is nestled on a hill-side, and is a city of no small interest, on account of the battles which have been fought there by the English and Spanish. On the Spanish side, directly opposite Tangiers, is "Trafalgar Bay," where Nelson, with but fifteen ships, attacked and conquered the French, with thirty ships, as they were at anchor inside the bay. There is nothing remarkable or attractive about the bay, as far as natural beauty is concerned; it is merely a low, curving, sand beach. Further on we passed near to Algeciras, and saw the town where the Spanish Queen sat in her chair on the beach to see the Spanish fleet take the fortress of Gibraltar. It was not captured, and she returned sadly disappointed and dejected. At 11 o'clock we passed Gibraltar. I had a splendid view of the Rock and of the fortifications. It was the grandest spectacle I have seen thus far. On one side the Rock rises to a height of 2,000 feet; on the other side it slopes off gradually to the Mediterranean; the fortifications are near the bottom, and extend up to about one-third of the height of the mountain. They consist of terrace after terrace of solid rock hewn out and filled with heavy cannon. All the navies in the world, together with all the "Iron Gun-boats," would not even make an impression on the rock sides of this fortress. The English have held it since 1704, and probably will hold it as long as the world stands. It was from this fortress that red hot balls were first used in warfare. Just here we saw a large ship, presenting a beautiful appearance; and just before she passed us, she threw out the "Stars and Stripes" to the breeze. As I saw them flying, I could not but think of the glory of our country, and hope that the rebellion now going on at home might be crushed, and that the "American Flag," that glorious emblem of Liberty, might float in victory over every portion of our country, from Maine to Texas, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Directly opposite to Gibraltar, is the African Coast. Gibraltar, and the rock opposite, are what the ancients called the "Pillars of Hercules." They well deserve the name. It was on this rock, on the African coast, that the Moorish General Tarik looked down upon the vine-clad hills of Spain, and, with his multitudes of Moors, dashed over the waters and took possession of the land, with the sign of the Crescent emblazoned on their battle flags. How often, when in college, I have read in the Latin and Greek, of "two Pillars of Hercules" in the far, far West. How often I have heard of regions still farther West, which the ancients believed existed, but had not the courage to penetrate to them; and now I have come from those far western shores, and have passed between these same old pillars. Through these pillars the ships of the ancient Tyrians sailed, on their voyages to Cornwall, in England, to obtain tin. Here passed Roderick, the Goth. "The Cid," too, has ploughed these self-same waters, and achieved those famous deeds so renowned in Spanish history. The Moors have swept these same straits in their piratical crafts, and how many bloody tales could be told, if these waters and rocks could but speak forth what they have for ages witnessed. I almost imagine that I can now see some antique bark sailing along, bound to what were then unknown and dark lands. But these have passed away, and scarcely the memory of them in history exists. I feel now that every inch of this "Classic Sea," this "Mare Internum" of the ancients, is historic—every wave seems to tell of by-gone times, and of nations crumbled to dust.

For the past two days, the surface of the sea has been without even a ripple—the sunsets are gorgeous—the moonlight nights are beautiful—and nature makes everything attractive.

We shall reach Malta on the 23d, and thence proceed direct to Alexandria, in Egypt. How strange that, only one month ago, I was in the New World, and am now here.

W—.

DEAR F—:

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, Oct. 29th, 1863.

I last wrote you from near Malta; the letter went via Marseilles, and will reach you, doubtless, in about three weeks from the time it was mailed. My visit to Malta was a bright spot in my life, and I shall always remember my visit there with the greatest pleasure. We sighted the island about sundown, and at seven o'clock in the evening, as the pale moon was shining brightly, we passed by "St. Paul's Bay," and soon after we entered the bay of the little town, "Valetta." It was a grand sight, I can assure you, as she sailed slowly up the harbor, passing the forts and ships of war. The moonlight was so clear that we could see the whole of the beautiful city spread-there not longer than one hour; shall then cross the Channel to Liverpool. The voyage, thus far, has been one of universal pleasantness, the weather has been fine, and we have made a good run every day; the "Etna" is a fine bark-rigged Steamer and has everything suited for the welfare and pleasure of her passengers; the Captain and Officers are gentlemen, and do all in their power for the comfort of their passengers. To give you some little idea of the mode we spend our time on ship-board, we take breakfast at 9 a. m., after which we talk or read, or enjoy ourselves on the quarter-deck until 12 m., we then partake of lunch—after lunch I spend my time in reading—at 4 o'clock we are called to a sumptuous dinner, then it is that the subject of Secession is discussed by all who are present, foremost among all is heard the voice of my "Compagnon du Voyage," Mr. B—, laying down the law in his peculiar and characteristic style; he always, to my mind, has the best of the argument in the debate, and the Rebels receive no excuse from him. After dinner we lounge about the ship, thinking of home, and of what our friends are doing. At 7½ p. m. supper, various amusements in the evening, and thus the day passes, and our voyage. I am reading "Eothen," a book on eastern travel; it is a series of biblical scenes. I am also interested in "Stephens' Travels in Egypt, &c.," as I expect to visit the places mentioned by him. I expect, however, to see more than he mentions, as my motto is the "festino lente" of the ancients, or, in other words, I shall pass over land and water with moderate haste. The magnitude and splendor (if I may call it so) of my travels in the Eastern World, are now, since I left home, beginning to break in upon my mind, and with thankfulness for permitting me and my friend, Mr. B—, to travel in those lands trodden but by few comparatively. My friend, Mr. B—, is perfectly happy in thinking and talking of our projected tour, and his gratitude to you is very great for the invitation to travel with me. Good night.

W.

NOTE.—Mr. B— was a Congregational Minister, invited by Mr. T. to accompany his son on his travels, William having just graduated at College.

DEAR F—:

LIVERPOOL, October 9th, 1863.

I last wrote you on the 6th, one day before we reached Queenstown; we arrived at that place on the 7th, at 2 a. m., remaining there but one hour, to land a few of our passengers. We then steamed away for Liverpool, at which place we arrived yesterday morning at 9 o'clock; the sail across the Channel was unpleasant, on account of the thick mist and rain which are so usual in and around England; it has rained all the time I have been here, and the people here say that this sort of weather is most frequent; it is quite a change from the genial and pleasant weather of our country. I cannot describe my feelings as I first trod the soil of Old England, the home of my ancestors; it seemed like coming home. I thought how you would enjoy visiting the country from which our ancestors emigrated nearly 250 years ago. I do not propose to travel in England until my return from the very old world; this place has been described so often by travelers from our country, that I shall not attempt it. I have "done" Liverpool as much as is possible in such short time, and such weather. I have visited the celebrated Docks, the best, in every particular, in the world, built of the most substantial masonry possible, are, for the most part, quadrangular in shape, having large gates to hold in the water, when the tide falls outside, as it does to the number of twenty or more feet. In case of severe storms ships within these docks are safe, in the stream outside they are exposed to much damage in bad weather, and in many cases are wrecked; there are ten miles of these docks, and nearly all are filled with ships from all quarters of the globe. I visited the "St. George's Hall," the great building of the city; it is a grand structure, of a kind of sand stone, lofty and well proportioned in its parts; it is used for public meetings, musical concerts, &c., it will seat upwards of 3,000 persons with ease. The Railroad Depot is a fine structure, and has an air of substantiality which our buildings, for like purposes, do not possess; the cars, however, are small, and something quite novel to me, were not supplied with brakes; the trunks of passengers are placed on the top of the cars, and thus the English travel. I do not believe that there has been any improvement in Hotels here for years, there is none of that striking elegance which we meet with at our New York hotels, everything is old fashioned, but the food is good, and would suit anybody in the world. I was struck with the substantiality which seemed to pervade everything I saw in the city—the streets clean, the stores built to last for ages, carriages are strongly built, the description of the city, and everything in it, is, however, so often written by travelers that I will not be too minute. I find that we can take a steamer here direct for Alexandria, in Egypt, for £32 12s. sterling each, and have engaged passages in the steamer "Laconia," 1,500 tons burthen, a fine vessel in every particular, and will sail to-morrow, the 10th, from Wellington Dock. As we are in haste to reach Egypt, will write you on the passage thence.

W—.

DEAR F—:

IN THE MEDITERRANEAN, October 19, 1863.

I left Liverpool in the steamer "Laconia," on the 10th inst., for Alexandria, Egypt, at 9 a. m. It was a beautiful day, and as we sailed down the Mersey, we had a fine view of English landscape, and of that town so much detested by Americans, Birkenhead.* We saw a great many steamers and other vessels, of all kinds, I may say in almost countless numbers—among others the "Scotia," bound to America. I waved a farewell to her; she bound to my home, and I just beginning my tour, en route to Egypt. We arrived at the Holyhead Light, at 6 p. m., and had a very fine view of the lofty mountains of Wales. Soon, however, we lost sight of the land, and steamed down the Channel. We had fine weather until Monday, and all went on "merrily as a marriage bell" until we arrived in the "Bay of Biscay," and then what a change; such rough weather as we then met with, I have never before witnessed; the waves came tumbling and rolling over the ship at a most fearful rate, threatening to sink us every moment; the wind ing itself out before us, more like a picture than a busy active town. In the morning of the following day, at seven o'clock, I went ashore and visited first the "Palace of the Knights of St. John." You will find out all about them in your "Cyclopedia American." They built this noble and magnificent building in the year A. D. 1500. The things worthy of special notice, are the portraits of their former patrons, Louis XIV. and XVI., also some of the English contemporary monarchs. The pavement is of beautiful mosaic work, with the coats of arms of the Grand Masters. Along the halls on either side stand the representatives of the knights, clothed in the ancient coats of armor. In their hands are lances, and there they stand, as if ready at the call of the Grand Master to hurl their messengers of death against the invading Turk. One armor, that of Vagincourt, is inlaid with gold, and is a beautiful specimen of the artificers' work of that time. Their Council chamber is surrounded on all sides by "Goblin tapestry," the gift of the rich and powerful Louis XIV. But far surpassing all in historic interest, is the Armory of the Knights. Here are collected the ancient field pieces, pistols, lances, clubs, in short all the weapons of offense and defense used by the Knights. Here also are the sceptres of the First and Last Grand Masters—one is of gold, the other of silver; the "edict of the Pope," about 1150, giving legal existence to the knights as a body in defense of Christianity; the "bugle" which sounded the blast as the Order left Rhodes; the "Proclamation of Charles V.," giving up the island of Malta to the Knights.

* Obnoxious to Americans as the place of building the notorious "Alabama," and other Privateers, for the Southerners.

In the entrance below is the carriage of Valette, he from whom the city is called Valetta. This carriage is massive and dilapidated. I entered it for curiosity, and nearly brought the whole structure down upon my luckless head. Its age is about 350 years. I left the palace with thoughts of the old Knights being around me. Here they reigned, lived and died, having achieved a name which will be glorious while time shall last. I wish I could tell you more about this beautiful palace, but as I have to write on other subjects, I will say no more at this time.

From the palace I went to the church of St. John, where the knights held service more than 300 years ago. This church is a noble building, and days would be required to see it and study it thoroughly. I saw the Silver Gates, and entered the Crypt, where the dust of the Grand Masters repose in sacred silence, disturbed only by an occasional visitor. It seemed like holy ground, this Crypt, where those old and venerable masters sleep in death. The statuary and paintings in the church are very interesting, though not of an extra high order, if I except the paintings of the flagellation of our Saviour, of St. Michael, and the beheading of St. John, which last is very valuable, on account of its great age.

Leaving the church, we visited the fortifications, and looked off on the bosom of the blue sea, and down upon the busy little city below. The city has from the harbor an oriental aspect, which in a degree vanishes when one enters it. We purchased all sorts of delicious fruit at very low prices, and at one p. m. we steamed off for Alexandria. Gradually the beautiful Island grew fainter and fainter, until nothing but blue sea could be seen on all sides.

I wish I could write more about Malta—about the natives, but I have so many other things to write about, that I have to forego that pleasure until a more favorable opportunity.

We arrived in Alexandria the fourth day from Malta, in just thirty-one days from New Haven.

In my next I will give you my experience of Oriental life. W.

DEAR F——:

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, Oct. 30, 1863.

My last announced my arrival at this city, from Malta, on the 27th inst.

On landing, we immediately were pounced upon by "Dragomans," but finally found the P. and O. Hotel, and secured a good room at ten shillings each per day, including board. About one hour after landing, we enjoyed a donkey ride to Pompey's Pillar and to Cleopatra's Needle. Away we went, John Gilpin like, in considerable trepidation at the way the donkeys went. We could only cry out in broad English, "Stop my donkey,"—the Arab boys only drove the donkeys the swifter, and in spite of all danger, we were soon at the foot of "Pompey's Pillar." This is a glorious old Pillar, 98 feet in height; and what feelings came upon me as I sat at the base, where thousands of Egyptians passed and repassed centuries ago. New scenes surround this ancient Pillar, and I thought of it only as a sort of sentinel all alone, watching over the heaps of dirt which doubtless cover the palaces of the Ptolemies and the beautiful city of the Egyptian Queen Cleopatra. After leaving this solitary monument of the past, we mounted our donkeys and galloped off to "Cleopatra's Needle." The ride was delightful, through long avenues, by the wells built by Alexander, past the forts of the Pasha and those of Napoleon. We reached the "Needle." I dismounted and stood with silent awe a spectator of the aged and celebrated Needle. Cleopatra had nothing whatever to do with this; one of the Ptolemies brought it from Syene, in Upper Egypt, more than Two Thousand years ago, and placed it where it now stands all alone by the sea side, viewing the downfall of the Old City and the building of the New. Where did this Needle come from at first? Who sculptured the figures on its sides? What is its age? These unanswerable questions arose in my mind. I sketched its form, and copied some of its hieroglyphics. The following day (yesterday) I visited the Catacombs of Cleopatra, entered their depths, and saw where the ancient dead reposed until the rude hand of the curious disturbed their rest. When I emerged from these catacombs, what a noise stunned my ears: "Bucksheesh," "Bucksheesh." I had a few American pennies, which I threw to the beggars, and they fought like tigers for the coppers. I wish you had been there to enjoy the scene. On my way home, I passed the Summer House of the Pasha. It is quite alone in a beautiful garden of date trees. There he and his pretty Circassian wives pass the warm summer days in neglectful ease.

I have been all through and through the town, and have learned something of Oriental life. I shall see much more of it, however, at Cairo. I go to that city to-morrow. The streets here are narrow, and filled with people from almost all parts of the world. The women are so completely covered that nothing but their eyes are visible. This style of dress is ordered by the "Koran." The donkeys are only about three feet high, and will scamper off with an immense Turk as easily as with a boy of twelve years of age. The donkey boys are bright, active little fellows, and beg you to hire their donkeys. One little fellow, about ten years old, wanted me to take his donkey; he said he was the best in the city, on account of his name being "Yankee Doodle." He knew me to be an American, and called his donkey accordingly. Many of these boys speak a little English.

Many Dragomans have called on me, stating their prices for the trip on the Nile. The price seems to be £50 for each passenger for the trip to the second cataract. I shall not make any arrangements till I arrive at Cairo. I am certain that my trip up the Nile will be splendid. The boats are roomy, and the food said to be equal to that of European hotels. I anticipate great pleasure from this time, as I am now fairly started on my tour. I shall keep you well posted, and in my next shall give you my views of this strange land.

W.

DEAR F—:

CAIRO, EGYPT, Nov. 3, 1863.

I last wrote you from Alexandria, the day previous to my departure for Cairo. I was up early on that morning, and started for the depot to purchase tickets for Cairo. I thought of home when I was getting tickets at the office. There I was, crowded by Turks, Greeks, Syrians, Arabs, Nubians, Italians and all other nations. I scarcely knew whether I was in or out of the body, but I finally got the tickets, and then such an ordeal as I had in getting my baggage checked to Cairo, will defy all expression. Like every traveler, I stuck to my baggage—and such a confused and mixed assembly of travelers I never saw before. We were all crowded into a small room, and such a din and confusion of foreign tongues—such crowding and pushing I hope never again to experience. Well, not to tire you, I got my baggage attended to, and then started to find a couple of seats in the cars. These were found with the utmost difficulty, but at last I squeezed myself in among two Englishmen, one Chinese, one German, one Greek and one Syrian—a motley car load, but a sociable and companionable party. The time for leaving was now come, the whistle blew, and off we sped like lightning for Cairo.

Leaving Alexandria behind, we passed "Pompey's Pillar" in plain sight on the left, and the "Palus Mareotus" on the right. The goodly land of Egypt lay on all sides, spread out with its fertile fields of corn and cotton. Occasionally we sped by a small Egyptian village, and once or twice saw an encampment of Bedouin Arabs from the Great Desert. It seemed rather incongruous with the past history of Egypt to be flying over this land with rapidity. At twelve, noon, we reached Kafr E'Zayat. Here we were obliged, on account of the railroad being destroyed by the overflow of the Nile, to proceed the remaining 100 miles to Cairo by steamer. We accordingly went on board, and in a few minutes were afloat on the Nile. I could with difficulty believe that I was sailing on the same old river that the boats of Cleopatra, that Plato, Pythagoras and Herodotus had sailed upon ages ago. I looked off to the banks on either side and saw the tall, majestic palms, and far up the river, as I saw the boats, with their great lateen sails, and heard voices in the Arab tongue, then I realized that I was in the land of the Ptolemics and Pharaohs. Our sail to Cairo was extremely interesting. The Nile has in some places leaped its banks to such an extent that many acres of rich land are submerged; and now and then you pass immense Sycamore trees, appearing to grow in a large lake. Far ahead we could see what seemed to be beautiful stone cities, surrounded by palm trees, but as we gradually drew nearer, we discovered them to be remnants of Egypt's past glory. They were filthy mud villages, built in every instance upon a rising eminence. Here, for unknown ages, the old cities have been buried, and upon them, or over them, are built these abominable mud villages. Every village had a tall mosque, displaying the crescent to our view. Conspicuous also were large white tombs, built just outside of the village. These cover the remains of "Sautons," or holy men, who are no more than idiotic or insane men. These men are so adored by the people that children are placed so that the Sauton's spittle may fall upon them, and thus be sanctified (as it were) for time and for eternity. I saw one of these miserable beings in Alexandria last week. He simply had a blue cotton rag about his loins, his head closely shaved, and was lying in the street, throwing his long bony arms about at a furious rate, looking more like a fiend than a human being with an immortal soul. Strange that the descendants of the Pharaohs should adore and revere such miserable idiots. Great villains in this land, when they desire to elude punishment for crime, put on the garb of a Sauton, and pretend to be idiotic—thus saving themselves from public vengeance.

We passed on our trip the identical spot where Alexander is said to have crossed, when he went into the desert to consult the priests of "Jupiter Ammon" about his true parentage. How often at college have I read of this journey of Alexander, and how great was my interest as I looked upon the spot where he passed the Nile.

The land of Egypt is low and flat, and lacks that beautiful mountain scenery which renders our rivers so famous for natural beauty, but the old Nile flows down now, as it did when our world was young; and I live in the past generations, and think of the mighty cities built along the banks of this river—think of the Pharaohs, the Ptolemies, and the former splendor and glory of this historic country. Their monarchs and their beautiful cities have ceased to exist, and in their stead, an ignorant populace, with these filthy, dirty mud villages, have grown up.

At twelve o'clock at night we stopped at "Boulack," two miles south of Cairo—the seaport of Cairo, if I may call it so. I took the Shepherd's Hotel carriage, and rode off to the Cairo of the Caliphs. In a short space of time we were in Cairo—the victorious, glorious Cairo! I could hardly believe that I breathed the air of that old city, whose history I have so often read, but whose gates I never thought of entering. But here I was, and I finally realized the fact in passing through streets so narrow as scarcely to admit of the entrance of a carriage. The following morning I walked about the city, and saw Oriental life in perfection. In the afternoon I mounted a small donkey, (everybody here rides donkeys,) and rode off to the citadel. From this place I gazed upon the "Gizah Pyramids" and those of Sokaria. There they were right before me—those enigmas which all the scientific men of ages never can solve. I could trace the Nile as it wound along to the south, and the immense Desert stretched off as far as the eye could reach. Old Cairo, too, lay beneath us, with its 400 mosques glittering in the sunlight. I stood on the same spot where the Mamelukes were treacherously slaughtered by Mahomet Ali. I entered the Grand Mosque of the latter, and saw the tomb erected to his memory. I was obliged to put on, over my boots, red cloth shoes or slippers, so as not to pollute the sanctity of the place by the tread of my feet. For alas, here I was regarded as nothing but "a Christian dog."

I must close now, and at another time give you an account of my sight seeing in and around this famous city. W.

DEAR F—:

CAIRO, EGYPT, November, 1863.

I will continue my letter, left abruptly a day or two ago.

Leaving the Grand Mosque, I passed the Harem of the Viceroy and saw Joseph's Well, 240 feet deep. Many believe that this well was built by Joseph, the son of Jacob. I passed down to the city and returned home by the Bazaars. These are so narrow that the tops are covered with mats to keep out the sun's rays. The Bazaar is nothing but a long narrow street, with small shops on either side. The Tunis bazaars are so narrow that I was nearly toppled off my donkey as I rode through. The scenes among these bazaars are intensely interesting, as being the most strictly Oriental place in the world. As I rode along on my little donkey, I could not but think what you would say, could you see me, now running against an old Turk, or driving through a number of Bedouin Arabs just in from the Desert, again meeting naked children and young women, clothed with nothing but their long gowns, open in front. I never witnessed such a mixed assembly of human beings before. Constantinople is nothing to be compared to Cairo in Oriental life. European life is rendering the former Occidental, while it is so slight here as to make no impression. I was much amused in seeing little boys, no larger than the children at home of six or eight years, hard at work in the gunsmith's shops and also in making shoes. The smart little fellows were as sedate and sober as old men.

You would have been much interested in riding through this delightful city. Yesterday I went to the sycamore tree where the Virgin rested with the Saviour in her flight into Egypt. I plucked some leaves from the tree, which I send you herewith. I climbed the tree and cut my name in the branches among countless numbers of other names cut thereon by travelers. This Sycamore is in a beautiful garden, and in a most beautiful spot. Tropical fruits of all descriptions—roses and hundreds of deliciously smelling shrubs—surround you on all sides. Just as I left this garden, I passed the well which they say sprung from the place where the Virgin struck her foot when she had thirst. I was beset by "bucksheesh" beggars in this almost sacred spot. I gave one man a few "paras" (farthings) for a bouquet which he picked for me. I wish you could have been with me there. What a splendid spot it would be for you to recline when fatigued—lulled to sleep by the music of birds—and at the same time feeling that you were in a hallowed place.

I left for Heliopolis, which is but a short distance. I rode along the "goodly land of Goshen"—the rough avenues of acacia and sycamore trees —the very road, doubtless, that the Sons of Jacob passed over when they came down to buy corn. I passed a number of wells of great antiquity, and who knows but that they drew water from these same wells? The fields are productive in a great degree, and for miles you can see the waving corn, and many fields of cotton. I do not wonder that the Israelites regretted having left this delightful land, for it is the pleasantest that I ever beheld.

We were now at the small mud village of Matareeyeh, occupying the site of Heliopolis, or On of the Bible. As we passed through this abominably dirty town, we were followed by hungry dogs and half clothed women and children, crying "bucksheesh, Howajji." In the walls of this village I saw stones with old hieroglyphics cut deep in their surface. These stones, and the lovely, solitary Obelisk, which now opened to view around the corner, are all that remains of that famous city, Heliopolis, the Oxford of Egypt. I sat before that Obelisk, and thought of the greatness of the city where Plato and Eudoxus studied, where Pharaoh of the Exodus lived, where Moses lived, where Joseph married his wife. I sketched the monument with its sacred writings. Just think of it; this Obelisk was placed here in the time of Abraham. It has seen the glory of the ancient city. Its form has been gazed upon by Joseph daily. Moses passed it hundreds of times. It is now the only part of that famous city. There it has stood for four thousand years, and is now as magnificent as when first placed there by old Osirtasen.

Just upon leaving this monument, children and men begged for "bucksheesh," and having no money, I offered a sandwich which I was just about eating, but they recoiled as if it had been poison. They would not touch the ham. I ate the ham, much to their astonishment.

After leaving, I looked off towards old Cairo and saw the Pyramids alone in their grandeur, and the Desert with its trackless wastes, and the Nile coursing far to the south. How often have the people of Heliopolis viewed that same scene. Where are they now? Not even a vestige of their glory remains. A filthy mud village is built upon and over the once noble and famous city. How true the prophecy: "Not one stone shall be left upon another." I could write pages of interesting matter, but have not the time.

To-morrow I go to the "Nileometer" and Island of Rhoda, where tradition states that Moses was drawn from the bulrushes. W.

DEAR F—:

CAIRO, November 12, 1863.

I wrote you last by steamer of the 7th inst., since which I have arranged for our trip up the Nile. We have now for the present finished Cairo, the Victorious, the Cairo that made "the Prophet" smile. We went last to the Mosque of Amer, in Old Cairo, which was built A. D. 700, more than 1100 years ago! There are two marble pillars upon the same pedestal in this mosque, about ten inches apart. Whoever passes between these is certain of entering the Paradise of the Prophet, and of spending eternity in perpetual youth with the "Houris." I passed through easily, but my friend, Mr. B., tugged and tried with all his might, but alas! it was all in vain. He got wedged in, and then came Virgil's "Hoc opus, hic labor est," and he came out again. "The leeks and onions" increase the rotundity of one rapidly here; he could not for the life of him pass through. Tradition says that when this mosque is in ruins, Mahomedanism will cease. The mosque will be in ruins in a few years, and then good bye to the doctrines of the false Prophet. We went also to the Greek convent near by, and inspecting the ancient pictures and relics, we were invited by the Prior to seat ourselves at his side, which we did. We had coffee offered us, and then followed interesting conversations, etc. Leaving this convent, we visited the Palace and gardens of Shoobra. The approach to Shoobra is along an avenue four miles long, with large acacia trees on either side. If you imagine Temple street in New Haven twice its breadth and four miles long, you will have some small idea of the beautiful avenue to Shoobra. Arrived there, we entered the gardens and saw all sorts of fruits and flowers, and saw the palace built by Mehemet Ali. The present reigning Pacha uses this as his summer house. On our way home from Shoobra, we met the harem of Helim Bey, brother to the Pacha. The harem consisted of a large four horse carriage, with three or four wives of the Pacha's brother. The carriage was preceded by three runners, to clear the road. It was followed by three eunuchs of the blackest dye, on superb Arab steeds. Thus lolled along the harem of a young man only 21 years of age. The harem, you must bear in mind, signifies not only the place where the wives are kept, but also the wives collectively, and can be applied to two or three of them. Thus, when three wives of the Pacha are riding in a carriage, it is said that "the Pacha's harem is coming, clear the road."

This is a strange land, but since I have been here I have prized the truth of the Bible more than ever; for with my own eyes I have seen how true were its prophecies regarding Egypt and her once powerful cities. Truly, "her cities have become desolate and without an inhabitant." No atheist or infidel could see what I have seen, and aver that the Bible is the work of man and untrue.

When you receive this letter, I shall be far away up the Nile. We leave Cairo on the 16th. I shall hoist the "Stars and Stripes" on our boat, and there it shall wave in the breeze until our voyage is ended. To give you an idea of life on the Nile, I send a copy of our contract for the trip. As there were no Americans here to go, Mr. B. and myself take the boat for ourselves "from Cairo to Assoum, and back to Cairo." Our dragoman "agrees to take us to Assoum and back for the sum of £110 sterling. We are to be allowed 15 days of 12 hours each, or 180 hours sunlight, for stopping on the downward voyage, for seeing sights and objects of interest, including two days at Thebes on the voyage up. The days when the boat stops for baking bread for the crew, and for the convenience of the dragoman, and for any other cause, except at the travelers' express desire, are not to be included in the fifteen days. The stoppages may be taken in whole days or in parts of days. The dragoman is to engage a captain, steersman, and a crew of eight men, a cook and servant—all to the satisfaction of the travelers; and he and they are to perform all that may be required of them in their respective capacities. He is to find all washing for the travelers, and the lighting, which is to consist of candles. He is to supply food and stores of every kind that may be required, to their satisfaction, (except wines and liquors) the food to consist of the following:—BREAKFAST—tea, coffee, two meat dishes, bread, fresh baked, every second day, butter, eggs and preserves. LUNCHEON—bread, butter, cheese, biscuits and fruits. DINNER—soup and fish, one entree; one dish of meat, one of fowls, one of vegetables at least, one of pudding or of sweets, cheese, butter and dessert; coffee after dinner, and when required during the day; turkey once a week. TEA—in the evening. If there be no luncheon required, but an early dinner, then a SUPPER of sardines, cold meats, preserves, bread and butter. All these to be provided at such hours as may be required by the travelers; also oranges, lemons, or limes, to be provided. The dragoman agrees to pay all 'buck-sheesh,' as well to the crew as to guides, watchers and assistants on shore; all donkey hire necessary to enable the travelers to visit the ruins and objects of interest; also all the expenses of every description from the beginning to the end of the voyage; and to make no claim for any damage which the boat may sustain, or for its loss, if such should occur. Every thing shall be at the risk of the dragoman; he is to be responsible for the property of the travelers, and accountable for any loss or difficulty which may be sustained. No other passengers to be taken, nor to use the boat for trading. If any dispute shall arise regarding the fulfilling of this contract, it shall be referred to the nearest American Consul," etc., etc.

Such is our arrangement. We prefer to go by ourselves, as we can take our own time for sight seeing, having crossed two seas for this purpose. What do you think of "the Flesh Pots of Egypt," with such a bill of fare for a voyage of about fifty or sixty days? Do you wonder that the Children of Israel wished to return after and during their long wanderings and sufferings in the desert?

I shall not determine respecting our future route until after our return. It is reported that there is trouble in Syria. I hope all will be quiet soon in that section.

W.

—————
GEBEL EL TAYE, on the Nile, Nov. 24, 1863.

DEAR F—:

Last Wednesday, at 4 p. m., we came on board our boat, the "Fortunata," and ran up the "Stars and Stripes" just as we pushed off from the banks of the river, and started for the Cataracts in Upper Egypt. As is customary, we dropped down to Gizeh for the night. On the following morning we set sail for the Cataracts. The river was filled with boats ascending and descending; the sun shone out in his glory peculiar in this land, and our good boat sped on its way, while the crew of Nubians, of the blackest dye, sang their Nubian boat songs, while they kept time with their hands to the gentle tap of the tarbooker, or primitive Egyptian drum.

As we sailed along by the islands of Rhoda and Gizeh, the old pyramids stood out in their gray, sombre grandeur, looking down upon us as they did upon the Egyptian Kings, the Pharaohs and the Ptolemies ages ago. The atmosphere was so clear and pure that it seemed as if we could toss a stone to their cold, dark sides, but this was impossible, for their distance was not far from ten miles. The smaller and less interesting pyramids of Sakkara and Dashour were in sight, far off to the south, and at one time I counted eight in all, which I could clearly see, just as we turned a bend in the river. I looked back towards "Cairo the Glorious," but nothing could be seen save the lofty citadel, with its tall, towering minarets, stretching themselves far upwards into the blue sky, and looking as if the citadel was built in the very heavens. It was the grandest spectacle I have yet witnessed.

We sailed quietly along, passing groves of beautiful and majestic palm trees, and numbers of small villages; also the quarries of Masarah, from which stone have been taken since the Pyramids have been built.

It was time for the sun to set, and soon after "the moon unveiled her peerless light, and o'er the dark her silvery mantle threw." Mr. B. and myself sat for hours upon deck, viewing the desert hills on one side, and the fruitful fields on the other, as the moon shone down brightly upon them. Truly, we were sailing upon an enchanted river, as we thought—upon that river which was turned into blood—upon that river upon whose banks Jeremiah uttered his "lamentations."

I will here describe our boat, that you may know where and how we live as we sail along this noble old river. The boat is 70 feet long, 3 feet broad at her stern, in her middle 12 feet broad; her bows sharp as a needle—her mast 20 feet in length—the yard 65 feet—her lateen sail is immense—the bows are about 2 feet from the water, while the stern is as many as 8 feet from it. The cabin is, first, a saloon, then a room for Mr. B, a large one for myself, and then one for our dragoman. Our food is fine, viz.: excellent soups, beef, turkeys, chickens, varieties of game, bread, butter, cheese, pomegranates, water melons, figs, oranges, almonds, apricots, coffee, tea, etc., etc.

The weather is always delightful—the evenings lighted by "Heavens grand orb"—and we sail along with "nothing to molest or make us afraid." Occasionally we track the boat for a whole day, which gives us opportunity to walk on shore, and to visit the villages on the banks. We devise many expedients to drive off the boys and girls as they follow us, crying for "bucksheesh." The most effectual way is by brandishing a stout club, which I always carry on these excursions.

We arrived at Benisoef in the afternoon, passed on, and tied up at a distance of two miles from the village. It was a famous city once, but is now nothing but a miserable place, possessing no interest for the traveler. The ruins of interest do not commence until we reach "Es Siout," below Thebes. At the place where we now are is the old Copt Convent, which is on yonder cliff. The monks who inhabit it have just been swimming at a great rate to catch up with us, but they were unsuccessful in their attempts to catch us. However, they kept up an incessant howl for "bucksheesh." Who ever heard of monks stripping naked and swimming for charity? But it is true. The Arabs all know how to strip—they do it naturally. In one moment they will doff their habiliments and dance about entirely nude. Naked men and almost naked women throng the shores at some places and act more like demons than like human beings. They are, however, innocent in their want of dress, from necessity, apparently. This village is a miserable place, and we only stop for a breeze to spring up.

I send this letter by a boat passing for Cairo. My next will be from Thebes, if it is fortunate to reach you. We expect to reach that old city about the 5th of December.

W.

DEAR F—:

THEBES, EGYPT, December, 1863.

Since my last I have seen the beautiful temples at Philæ; been in Nubia and Ethiopia; visited Elephantine, the Cataracts, Edfou, and all the temples and places of interest on the Nile, between the Cataracts and Thebes, although suffering from my recent illness. I made it a point to see every thing that could be seen, and I have done it, too.

We arrived here several days since, and have seen the temples of Luxor, Karnæ, Goornou, etc.; have visited the Tombs of the Kings, of the Queens; have called upon old Mennon, who for century after century has looked out upon the east with cold and stony eyes. He is in a sitting posture, and is sixty feet high; seventeen feet from his elbow to the tip of his longest finger. I found one Colossus of granite whose ear was longer than from my elbow to the end of my fingers. There were so many interesting relics of the Ancients at the various places above and at Thebes, that, were I to attempt the description of them, I should never come to the end.

I mention a few facts, however. I measured one of the stone pillars at Karnæ, and found it to be thirty-six feet in circumference. I found the hieroglyphics in one temple cut into the solid rock to the depth of four inches; the carved figures on the Luxor obelisk are so deep that I can thrust my forefinger into them the whole length of it, and these are cut in the solid granite!

I met with a mishap, one day, when going to Karnæ. The saddle girth broke, the saddle rolled off, and I also—while the little donkey drew me ten feet over the hard ground. My revolver in my pocket, fortunately, was not loaded.

I have also been into the "Mummy Pits" of Egypt. No words can express the disgusting scene which presented itself to my eyes while there. My feet cracked and crushed through the skulls and bodies of mummied men and women. To enter the pit, I had to crawl like a snake into a narrow aperture hardly larger than a window pane, when I found myself in a large room filled with thousands of bodies, wrapped in shawls as fresh to-day as they were four thousand years ago. I have some five specimens which I brought out of the pit. This pit was far, far down in the bowels of the earth, and there were with me only my dragoman and an Arab. Mr. B. would not venture in. We had candles, which lighted up the pit and filled it with smoke. The dust from the mummies was so suffocating that I could not endure it. I would not enter it again on any account.

At Thebes "Mustapha Aga," the English and American Consul, has treated us with great kindness. He has placed a splendid Arab horse at my disposal, offered me servants, given me several Egyptian antiques, etc., etc. He is a perfect Arab gentleman. I had him and the Governor to dine with me on board the "Fortunata," a day or two ago. I visited the Governor at "Er Siout," when I was there, a few weeks since. He treated us very politely, gave us coffee, snuff, and the tchubouk, or pipe.

I must reserve for my next a more detailed account of the vast temples, tombs and ruins in this place, on both sides of the river.

I doubt if this letter will reach you, as it is carried from Thebes by runners to Cairo—500 miles—which takes nine days; thence to France, thence to England, and thence to America. So it will be a great traveler before you receive it, if at all.

Yours,

W.

DEAR F—:

ON THE NILE, December 26, 1863.

In my last I gave you an account of the wonderful ruins, etc., at Thebes. On the day following our departure from that old city, we were at Dendera, where is one of the grandest temples of Egypt. We visited it, and were much interested in our visit there. It is a beautiful temple still, although the hand of some destroying conqueror has mutilated some of the fine sculptured images on the walls. I went down into subterranean passages dark as night, and filled with thousands of hissing bats. The sculptures down in these dark passages are just as perfect as when chiseled there by the skillful artist of antiquity. The artist and the chisel are no more, but there are the sculptures as perfect as life.

From the temple I went to the other side of the river to Keneh. I went up to the city, visited the old Governor, drove through the bazaars, and hurried back to the boat, which then started for "Es Siout," where we arrived in three days. We found there two English and two American boats; in one of the latter I found a fellow passenger from New York to Liverpool. We spent some time together, and then I drove off for the celebrated tombs of "Es Siout." I walked through dozens of tombs, had a fine view of Egypt, and filled my pockets with antiques of those who, 4,000 years ago, breathed and lived, and enjoyed life as the inhabitants of "Siout" do to-day. I left at 1 p. m.—exchanging salutes with all the boats there.

We arrived at Beni Hasson yesterday morning, and spent our Christmas in the celebrated grottoes of Beni Hasson—the oldest tombs in Egypt. One of them was probably built by Shofi, 2,700 years B. C. The paintings are, many of them, still fresh, and as plain as when painted there, more than 4,000 years ago. Just as I was leaving the largest one, I saw the name of our townsman, Rev. S. D. Phelps, cut in the stone. I remained to cut mine beneath his, and then left for the boat, two miles distant. In this large tomb, said by some to have been that of Jacob and Joseph until the Exodus, are pictured on the walls, wrestlers, women playing at ball, men and women being bastinadoed, glass blowers, workers in flax, statuaries, &c., &c. The material history is pictured on the walls. The tombs are of enormous size, and cut from the live rock.

At 1 p. m. we started for Beniscef. After leaving, we were visited by passengers (English) from an ascending boat, and were informed that Gen. Grant had gained a victory over Bragg. I hope it is true. The last I have heard from America is your letter of October 20th. We arrived at Beniscef two hours ago, and after walking again through its dirty cheap bazaars, I was actually glad to return to our boat, and resume our downward trip. We shall stop two days at the Sakkara and Gizeh Pyramids, and then I shall have nearly done Egypt—as is said in the Scriptures, I have journeyed "from Migdol to Syene even unto the borders of Ethiopia." I cannot go to Petra—the Bedouins are fighting there; and so this year many travelers will be disappointed. So I must go to Palestine, when I start for that country, via Jaffa. Before I close this letter I shall have visited the Pyramids, etc.

SAKKARA, Dec. 27.—I continue my letter. I have been off all day to the Sakkara Pyramids. I started early in the morning on a poor worn-out donkey, and in two hours I was at these Pyramids. I climbed the large one, and had a fine view of the Lybian desert, the Nile, Gizeh Pyramids, and those of Aboozer and Darhoor. The number of Pyramids in this part of Egypt is about fifty, of which noble old Cheops towers high above all, the wonder and admiration of the whole world. I ascend him to-morrow. I next went to the cemetery where the "sacred bulls" were buried. This cemetery extends for thousands of feet under ground, and in all directions. In separate chambers are the tombs of the bulls—black granite sarcophaguses, 12 feet 5 inches long, 7 feet 6 inches broad, and, with the cover, 11 feet high. I saw twenty-four of these; others in great numbers remain covered with stones and sand. I admire these tombs much; they are among the wonders of the world—each one as smooth as the smoothest glass. I next went to a tomb lately found buried in the sand. It is as large as a large church. I saw immediately upon entering it, a small hole, and the thought of making an exploration came upon me, so my dragoman and I crawled lengthwise through the collected dirt of centuries, and finally found ourselves in a large chamber of great size. The dragoman had never been here before, so we advanced cautiously, with lighted candles, until we found another dark passage like the entrance. We literally wormed ourselves through this, and by the dim candle light, saw an immense sarcophagus before us of gigantic proportions. I expected that some old priest or king would blow out our candles and murder us for rudely entering this silent chamber of death, but as he did not show himself, I crawled to the top and looked through a hole made centuries ago by some destroyer, to obtain the buried treasures. I saw nothing but the skull, jaw bones and other parts, in their 4,000 years' old home. The dragoman, with our two canes, managed to pull the jaw bone to the opening, and I have the tooth of some old Pharaoh, who may have lived in the time of Joseph or Moses. Perhaps it is the tooth of Thothinees II., the hard-hearted one.

We afterwards visited chambers and halls of exquisite beauty in this tomb. I wish I had space to tell you all; but mounting my little donkey, I rode back to our boat, having passed over the site of Ancient Memphis, once as glorious as Nineveh or Babylon. Nothing but shapeless mounds, and a colossus of Sesostris, now remain to show where that noble and powerful city stood, where Joseph lived, and where Moses was educated. Thus has my Sabbath been spent, surrounded by infidels, no church bell to welcome the Sabbath dawn. I hope I spent it profitably in seeing the fulfilment of the prophecies against this sinful land. Memphis is mentioned but once in the Bible, thus: "And Memphis shall bury them." True! Thousands upon thousands, in countless myriads, lie at sleep in the neighboring hills, and the ground for acres is whitened with broken bones and whitened skulls. You tread them under foot as you walk along.

DEC. 29.—Just back from “Old Cheops” and his companions. He is a noble old pyramid. I ascended to the top and carved my name deep in the rock. His cubical contents is 85,000,000 feet; height 450 feet. I entered the dark rooms inside, and saw the best masonry in the world. The sarcophagus of Cheops is still there. The room is of granite (black) from Syene; each block is of enormous size, and you can with difficulty find the joints where the blocks come together. I lunched at the entrance, and bought some “antiques” found in Cheops. I saw the Sphynx, 103 feet around his head, 142 feet long, hewn from one solid rock. I visited the other pyramids of less interest. These are nine in number.

When I returned to the boat, I found your letters up to the 24th of November. I rejoice at the victories of the army. We return to-morrow to Cairo. My trip up the Nile has occupied nearly two months. I shall spend a few days at Cairo, and thence go to Suez, pass the Red Sea where the Israelites crossed, visit the wells of Moses in the desert; thence, return to Alexandria, and take passage for Syria, travel through the Holy Land and Syria, visiting Damascus and other places of interest, not forgetting “Tyre and Sidon.”

Yours,

W—.

DEAR FATHER:

SUEZ, EGYPT, January 1, 1864.

I returned to Cairo in safety; while there I met several Americans, ladies and gentlemen, preparing to make the trip up the Nile, &c. We made up a company for a trip to this place.

Yesterday we crossed the Red Sea, to visit Moses' Fountains, in the Arabian Desert, in Arabia Petreæ. I saw the spot where the Israelites crossed four thousand years ago, a broad valley between the Tall Mountains. Pharaoh, the hard-hearted man, perished here. I filled a small bottle with water from the fountain of Moses; picked up some beautiful shells, and started for the village of Suez. It is the most wretched Arab village I have seen. In fact, there is nothing here but the Hotel, and a few French store-houses for the Suez Canal Company. A fresh water canal has just been opened between Alexandria and Suez, by which water is brought from the Nile; previously all drinking water was brought from Cairo by Railroad. The Grand Canal is to be opened, eventually, at this place. I am satisfied that it will be completed, although it is an immense work, and prosecuted at an enormous expense. As the French are building the canal, it will be a stronghold for them, and on Egypt, eventually, and may endanger the English possessions in the East Indies.

There is nothing here to interest me, and I return to Cairo to-day.

W—.

DEAR F—:

ALEXANDRIA, January 8, 1864.

We spent a few days at Cairo in sight-seeing, and came to this place on the 6th, en route to Palestine. I feel now that we have finished our Egyptian tour, and, thoroughly. There is not a Temple that I have not seen; the Ruins of Egypt are indelibly stamped upon my mind, and the beautiful and majestic Nile remains fresh in my imagination, so farewell forever to Egypt. To-morrow we leave this old city for Joppa, where Simon, the Tanner, lived, I shall remain there but one day, as I can see all places of interest in that time, and then start for Jerusalem. You cannot have any conception of the feelings of one visiting this part of the world; and as our way tends towards the Holy City, we seem to be living in past ages.

W—.

DEAR F—:

JERUSALEM, January 15th, 1864.

I left Alexandria at 8 a. m. on the 10th inst. in the Austrian steamer, and after a pleasant sail of thirty hours, we dropped anchor in the little harbor of Joppa "by the sea-side." Our accommodations on board of the steamer were of the highest order; better than on either of the English steamers I have sailed in. We stepped ashore from a little boat, and went to a first-rate hotel, not far from "Simon, the tanner's" house, where Peter had his vision. I visited the house twice. I also visited the orange groves, the largest in the world. Millions and millions of oranges were hanging ripe on the trees; it was a beautiful sight for January. I walked down to the beautiful sea-shore, and gathered some shells as a souvenir of the place.

The city is barren of interest, and travelers generally remain there but one day, and then proceed to Jerusalem. We, therefore, found a good dragoon, and after a long, weary debate, as to price, &c., we engaged him for the tour through Palestine, and to Tyre and Sidon, and to Beyrout, which will occupy thirty days.

Our ride from Joppa to Jerusalem was a two day's trip. We crossed the plain of the Phillistines on swift Syrian horses, and stopped at the Convent Kawleh through the first night. The second night we slept in the City of David, on Mount Zion, and close by the "Pool of Hezekiah." From my window I could see Mount Olivet and Mount of Offence, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, where they pretend to shew Calvary, the very place of the Cross, the identical Tomb of the Saviour, the stone of the unction, and other follies for which there is no foundation. At the Palace of Caiaphas, the rock is shown where the cock crew when Peter denied his Lord, and the pillar where Christ was bound, also the little cave where he was imprisoned, into which I entered. I have been to the Valley of Jehoshaphat; the Pool of Siloam, washed my hands and face there; saw the spot where Isaiah was sawn asunder; the tombs of David and Samuel, of Zachariah, of St. James, of Absalom, and of Jehoshaphat—the tombs of the Judges, Kings and Prophets; I saw the tower from which King David saw Bethsheba; the Fuller's Field, the Field of Blood; the Valley of Hinnom, where infants were burned in the arms of the brazen Moloch; I have seen the Pool of Bethesda, spoken of in the Testament, and have walked through the delightful little "Garden of Gethsemane," from which I got some jonquil bulbs, &c., which I shall send to you from Italy.

I go to-morrow morning to the Mosque of Omar, covering the site of the Temple of Solomon, built upon the Jebusite threshing floor, and near the place where Abraham was about to sacrifice to the Lord his son Isaac. All learned scholars now agree upon the genuineness of this spot.

JANUARY 16TH.—I have just returned from the above place, and have been much interested in my visit there. I saw the top of Moriah, where Abraham prepared his sacrifice. On this rock was afterwards built the "Holy of Holies," in the Temple of Solomon. Of this beautiful Temple there remains many broken stones and pillars. In one of the "Temple vaults" I saw some huge stones of the Ancient Temple, one of which I measured; its length is twenty-three feet. I also went to the gate of the Temple, which was called "Beautiful," where the two disciples healed a poor lame man. The view from the terraced top of this gate is grand indeed. You can see Mount Olivet; the Valley of Jehoshophat, with its countless tombs of the faithful Jews who have come from the corners of Christendom to be buried near the city of their fathers; the brook Kidron winds near by; "En Rogel" is near; then there is the Valley of Hinom where Moloch was worshipped; not far off is the Pool of Siloam, Aeldema, the lower Pool of Gihon, and the Fuller's Field. I picked a leaf and left for the hotel. To enter the enclosure of the Mosque of Omar, Christians must pay ten shillings each, and visit it an early hour of the morning, for fear of the Mahometans, who worship there at a later hour. I appropriated a piece of Mount Moriah and value it highly.

SUNDAY, Jan. 17th.—I left my hotel this morning at ten o'clock and passed through the Gate of St. Stephen, crossed the Kedron, and ascended to the top of the Mount of Olives, passing by the little Garden of Gethsemane. On the top of Olivet is built a Mahometan minaret—to its top I climbed, and enjoyed a delightful view of Jerusalem and the neighboring hills. I saw the Jordan and Dead Sea—they looked as if I could leap into them with ease, so clear is the atmosphere; the mountains of Moab looked broken, drear and silent, and far to the north; I saw the virgin snow on the lofty mountains, shining like a helmet of purest silver. There is a church built upon the summit of Olivet, over the spot where tradition asserts Christ to have ascended after his rising on the third day.

Our trip to Jordan begins to-morrow at eight o'clock a. m. The weather is very beautiful, but it is cold, and the ice forms half an inch in thickness. Pretty cold for tent life, but we shall enjoy it. W—.

DEAR F—:

JERUSALEM, Jan. 23d, 1864.

I wrote you a few days since from this place, giving my impressions on my entrance into this Holy Land. I sent the letter via Beyrout; you will probably receive this letter first. I returned last night from a five days' excursion to the River Jordan, the Dead Sea, Bethlehem and Hebron. To relate, we started early last Monday morning for Jericho, and passing Bethany, behind the Mount of Olives, we proceeded on our way over a rocky bridle-path, and over the same road which "the certain man who went down to Jericho and fell among thieves" traveled. Every now and then our Bedouin guards would run ahead, and peep into every nook and corner of the rocks, to see if there lurked any Arab cut-throats ready to jump forth and rob, and, perhaps, murder our little party. I have never seen a road which seemed so nicely fitted for plunder and murder as this same road. At noon we stopped to lunch at the ruins of a little "inn by the way-side," which suggested to us the inn to which the good Samaritan took the poor unfortunate which the Scripture tells us of. Lunch over, we turned our faces again towards Jericho, and at two o'clock in the afternoon we passed the Valley of Achor, where Achan was stoned. A short time afterwards we forded the Brook Cherith, where Elijah was fed by ravens, and at three o'clock, after a short ride through the delightful plain of the Jordan, we stopped our horses in front of our tents, the English Jack and American Ensign floating in the breeze. (We are traveling with a young English friend.) Our tents were pitched close by the "Fountain of Elisha," a brook where that Prophet healed when the sons of the prophets were at that place. I ascended a mound not far from the tents, and let me tell you of the magnificent scene there spread out like an extensive panorama. A few hundred feet to the west lay the ruins of old Jericho, all as silent as death itself, not an inhabitant there. The lofty walls where Rahab hid the spies, is now no more, but the mountain where they hid themselves for three days, is still there with its caves and hiding places. In front of me was Elisha's Fountain; not far distant was the Valley of Achor; the Jordan wound along until it lost itself in the Dead Sea. Gilgal, where the Israelites crossed and pitched the twelve stones, where Saul was crowned King of Israel, where Elisha cursed the pottage, the cure of Naaman, the Syrian, and the punishing of Gehazi took place, was in sight not far distant. The Dead Sea was ten miles to the south, beyond which the mountains of Moab loomed up to the view. The Jericho, where Zaccheus lived and climbed the tree, was close by. This view I took at sunset, when the rays of the setting sun flashed on the snow-crowned tops of Moab and lighted up the fertile plain of the Jordan, whose beauty Moses saw from yonder mountain top, and from which Elijah ascended in a whirlwind to the blue sky above. I took the same view at moonlight, and the beauty of the scenery I leave for better pens than mine to describe.

I retired to my narrow bed at seven o'clock p. m. after a hard day's work, and fearing a little for the safety of our little company, for before retiring I saw under the mountains some ominous black tents, an encampment of the Bedouins—the sons of Ishmael. We rested safely, and at eight o'clock the next morning started for the Jordan. We rode over the plain with our Bedouin guards, passed the modern Jericho of the New Testament, and saw where Zaccheus' house stood. We reached the Jordan at ten o'clock a. m. It had overflowed its banks, and run with terrible rapidity. This spot, where we halted for an hour, was where our Saviour is said to have been baptized. I picked some leaves and pushed on for the Dead Sea. We passed along the great plain for two hours, following some tracks of Bedouin horsemen, whose long spears I thought we might feel before reaching the sea. We, however, reached that remarkable sheet of water; which done, I leaped from my saddle, and in five minutes was rolling like a log in the water. I could not sink; I folded my arms and sat in the water with perfect ease. Its saltness is ten thousand times that of the ocean; it is worse than alum. When I came out I could not get the water off my body; it was like oil. Our faces were white, like leprosy, from the salt. We were indeed a sorry set when we again mounted our horses. We felt not only Shakespeare's "itching palm," but we itched all over for two or three days, and even now my hair is filled with salt.

This sea is 1300 feet below the level of the ocean, and is shut in on two sides by tall fine mountains. Although many writers represent it as the image of death, I confess that I liked the place much. The water had ripples on its surface, but they came slowly and sluggishly to the shore. We were on robbers' ground, and hastened to the mountains of Judea to lunch. We then rode through the terrible wilderness of Judea for six hours, until we reached the delightful little convent of St. Saba. Our ride to Mar Saba was from 12 to 5 p. m. The road was now on a lofty mountain top, and now upon the brink of a precipice, and again in the bed of some mountain torrent. After having gone a few miles, something moved on the hill-side opposite, and a Bedouin, dressed in all sorts of colors, with gun on his back, and with steps, each one a yard long, came forth, and hastened to join us. He was a savage looking fellow, and, although we were seven, with our guides, I confess I felt uneasy until he left us, which he did in a couple of hours.

When we arrived at the convent, we learned that our baggage train had been attacked by four fierce Bedouins, who tried to murder the guard, who fled "in terrorem" to a place of safety. However, the Bedouins were driven off, and the train arrived in safety. The train consists of two mules, two donkeys and two horses. On the following morning we were in the saddle, and riding over a pleasant road, and passing three or four Bedouin encampments, we reached the little "Bethlehem of Judea," and stopped at the Church of the Nativity until the next morning. We went to the well, for whose water David thirsted, and to which his mighty men came when they had broken through the hosts of the Philistines.

Bethlehem is a beautiful spot, on a gently sloping hillside, whose terraces are covered with olive trees innumerable. The inhabitants are all Christians, which means that they are about the same as common sinners in a civilized land. The Church of the Nativity is a splendid building, in the shape of a cross, and having in the interior forty-four red marble columns, which were formerly a part of Solomon's Temple. In this church they showed me the manger where our Savior was born, and the altar of the Innocents, where 20,000 children were buried when Herod had murdered the children of Judea. Poor monks! They showed me a number of holy places below the church, where certain saints were either born or murdered, etc. It matters not to enumerate them. Our blessed Savior was truly born in this village, but the precise spot, who can tell? It is a singular fact that you ride in one and a half hours from the village of Christ's birth to Calvary, where he was crucified. Ruth once gleaned in the fields over which I rode; and David, when a shepherd boy, used to roam over these same hills and valleys, just as that shepherd boy yesterday. Little did he think that he was to be King of Israel.

On the next day, in the morning, we went to Hebron, by the way of Solomon's Pools. These are three in number, about two hundred and fifty feet broad, two hundred and fifty feet long, and fifty feet deep. We arrived at Hebron (perhaps the oldest city in the world,) at five o'clock p. m. We encamped on a hillside, a little to the west of the city, and in view of the pool where David hung the murderers of Ishbosheth. We were very, very cold that night. We were 2,800 feet above the sea, and the hills were covered with ice and snow. The people at Hebron are fanatics, and think that they can be saved eternally by killing and robbing Christians. We were on the watch through the night, with a couple of loaded revolvers, a Damascus sword, and a dagger. We were not molested.

I visited here the Cave of Machpelah, where lies the dust of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Sarah, Rebekah and Leah. The Cave is covered by a Mahomedan mosque, and we were not allowed to enter, for we were Christians. The next morning, at eight o'clock, we visited the oak where Abraham's tent was pitched when the angels visited him, and he went with them towards Sodom. I enclose a leaf from this tree. We rode through the valley of Eschol, noted for grapes. It is literally filled with grape vines, and is a beautiful spot. We rode to Jerusalem, via Rachel's tomb and Bethlehem; lunched at Solomon's Pools, and arrived at Jerusalem six hours after we left Hebron. It would occupy hours in relating all the incidents of the way. On Monday we start for Shechem, and the Lake of Tiberius. Life in the Holy Land, at this season, is pleasant, but dreadfully cold,—something like encamping on the top of West Rock in November.

Yours,

W—.

DEAR F—:

NABLUS (Shechem), Palestine, Jan., 1864.

You will be surprised to hear from me at this place; but as one of the horses is lame, we are obliged to remain here a day, until we can procure another in his stead.

We left Jerusalem on Monday at 10 a. m., and in one hour we were on the summit of Scopus, where Titus encamped with the Roman legions when he destroyed Jerusalem. We continued our journey, and a little past noon entered the delightful territory of Ephraim. Our road lay through deep valleys, filled with extensive olive and fig orchards, and over the summits of lofty mountains, from which we could see the fatness of the land. We passed Gibeon; Rama, where Samuel was born; Gibeah, of Saul; Nob, where Doeg, the Edomite, slew the priests; and finally, Bethel, where Jacob had his remarkable vision. It is now a poor, miserable, broken down Arab village, with nothing to interest the traveler, except that it shows the site of the old Bethel of the Scriptures. Surely this land of Ephraim is the best in the country. Jacob, when he was dying, said, "With thee shall Israel bless," saying, "God make thee as Ephraim."

We pitched our tent on Monday night in a small town called Sinjel, noted for robbers. A traveler was killed there last year. We were not molested. In the morning of yesterday we packed up tents and started for Nablus, where we arrived last evening, just before sunset. One hour after starting we came to Shiloh, where Eli fell dead, and where the Ark of God rested for many centuries. It is now a heap of ruins. The prophecy against it is truly fulfilled, and that to the letter.

At 4 p. m. we were sitting by Jacob's Well. We read the chapter in John about the conversation held there by Christ and the woman of Samaria. Gerizim was on our right hand, Ebal on our left, and a rich and fertile plain stretched far away to Sychar, Salem and Enon, where John baptized on account of the much water there. How true; a beautiful stream runs by the town. The well is surrounded by granite columns in fragments; the sides are partly broken in, and the interior of the well is nearly filled with broken stones. The water is in no great quantity. Near by is the tomb of Joseph.

I ascended Gerizim this morning, and had a grand survey of the country round about. They pretend to show the twelve stones of Gilgal, also the ruins of the old temple.

The Samaritans are still here. I went to-day to the house of the Samaritan High Priest. He has been to England, and is very intelligent. He showed me an old manuscript, written by Adam's grandson, 3,400 years old. I amused him very much by examining his little boy's head, as well as his own. He believed me in all that I told him about the future character of his boy, from the fact that I guessed right about the bump of destruction! His son is only six years old, and engaged to be married. He also has a daughter one and a half years old, and her hand has already been asked in marriage. So much for the little town of Sichem and its people.

It was from Mounts Ebal and Gerizim that the blessings and curses were read by Joshua. Here the land was divided among the Israelites by tribe. Here Jotham uttered his singular fable against Abimelech.

To-morrow we start for Nazareth, where we arrive in two days.

TIBERIAS, (LAKE OF GALILEE.)

Last Thursday, we left Shechem at 7 a. m., rode through the beautiful vale of Nablus, reached Samaria at noon, and stopped awhile to view the magnificent plains surrounding it, as well as the site of the old city where the cruel and sinful Ahab ruled and died. The columns of his palace still stand on the brow of the hill.

We left Samaria, and in the afternoon passed along the plains of Dothan, where Joseph was seized and sold by his brethren. At 7 o'clock we encamped at Jenin, on the plain of Esdraelon. Jenin is the "Su-gamin" of Joshua. The next day, at 8 a. m., we started for Nazareth, crossing the extensive plain of Esdraelon. We came to Jezereel, where Jezebel was eaten by dogs. Jezereel is near the mountains of Gilboa, and its situation is very fine. It is now nothing but a collection of small mud hovels and barking dogs.

From Jezereel we went to the fountain where Gideon, with his little band of three hundred, vanquished the hosts of the Midianites. I lapped water, dog-like, as that famous band of three hundred did centuries ago. Next we crossed the battle field of Saul and the Philistines, and came to Shunem, where the Shunamite entertained Elisha. Passing the hill Moreh, we lunched at Nain, where Christ revived the poor widow's son. Nain is now a poor, wretched mud village. One hour from Nain we were at Endor, where the famous witch lived who was consulted by Saul before the battle. We crossed the high mountain behind Endor, and at 4 p. m. arrived at Nazareth. It is a Christian village, nestled in the beautiful vale of Nazareth, the home of our Savior, who for twenty-eight years was a carpenter in this little village. We were shown the workshop of Christ, his house, and his table, where he sat at meat with his father, mother, brothers and sisters. Of course I do not think that these are genuine. I walked upon the hill near Nazareth, and doubtless passed the "brow" where his towns people tried to throw him headlong to the ground beneath. I could with difficulty realize the fact that the Savior of mankind lived for more than one-fourth of a century as a mechanic in this same Nazareth.

We left Nazareth yesterday and came to Tiberias, where we arrived at nightfall. On our way to this place we passed through "Cana of Galilee," where Jesus performed the first miracle of his ministry. We are encamped on a hill, close to the Lake of Tiberias, where the greater part of Christ's miracles were performed—where he delivered his "Sermon on the Mount"—where he fed the 5,000—where he stilled the waves—and where he saved Peter from sinking. Capernaum, Chorazin and Bethsaida are in sight, but so sadly in ruins that their site is disputed by many.

To-morrow we start for Acre, Tyre and Sidon.

This Palestine tour is a grand one. I have visited every place of interest in the whole land.

You will next hear of me from Tyre.

Yours,

W.

DEAR F—:

TYRE, February 6, 1864.

My last was from the Sea of Galilee. We left that place last Monday at 8 a. m., and arrived at Shef Armar at nightfall. Our journey on that day was very pleasant, but not of any particular Scriptural interest. The little village of Shef Armar is on the mountain above the plain of Acre, and commands a magnificent view of the Mediterranean, Mount Carmel and the rich plain of Esdraelon.

On Tuesday, in the morning, we started for Caipha, at the base of Mt. Carmel. Our road was a very fine one, and we arrived at Caipha at noon. In the afternoon we ascended Mt. Carmel and visited the Convent, the best one in the whole land. Carmel is very interesting as being the place where "Elijah slew the prophets of Baal," and where Elisha lived. The Convent is built over the cave where Elijah hid himself from the anger of Jezebel.

On Wednesday we went to Acre by the road over the beach. Our horses were very fleet, and we arrived at St. Frau D'Acre at 11 a. m. We remained twenty-four hours at Acre, visited the fortifications, the bazaar, and finally the Pasha himself, who received us cordially. We also went to some gardens belonging to a fellow passenger with whom I came from England in the steamer. There are in the gardens 20,000 fruit trees of every description. Some of the orange trees had each as many as a thousand oranges on their branches.

Acre is one of the most interesting places on the coast. It was the stronghold of the old Crusaders, and was twice besieged in modern times—once by Napoleon, in 1799, and in 1840 by the English and French.

We went to Brusa, four hours to the north, and remained there Thursday night.

Yesterday we crossed the "Ladder of Tyre," a terrible mountain pass. Having crossed this, we were fairly out of the Holy Land, and in Syria. We rode along the seaside, and at 3 p. m., pitched our tent inside the walls of Tyre, "the mistress of the seas," "whose merchants were the honorable of the earth." It is now a terrible example of a fulfilled prophecy. It is indeed "a place for spreading nets." Hundreds of granite columns are thrown about the ruins and submerged in the sea; and where, in the prophetic time, "palaces and pleasant houses" once stood, now nothing can be seen but poor wretched hovels. The harbor, where formerly the merchant princes loaded their ships, has now but a half dozen crazy boats, as if in derision of the ships of olden time. The 27th chapter of Ezekiel gives a fine description of Tyrus.

This morning I walked into the country to the "Tomb of Hiram," a poor representation of which you will find in Thompson's "Land and the Book." There are five immense stones; the center one is 12½ feet in length, 8 feet broad, and 6 feet thick; the whole height is 21 feet. I climbed to this large stone, and in one corner I found a hole, through which I wormed myself, and then I lay on my back just as Hiram did, and in the exact spot, in the very sarcophagus itself. I found it extremely difficult to get out of this narrow cell, for I went in head foremost, and turned myself around while inside with difficulty, so that when I emerged from the awful place, my feet came out first, and as I could not see where to cling with my feet, I was well nigh precipitated to the ground, where is a very deep well of water. I found it impossible and quite dangerous to ascend to the highest stone; I endeavored two or three times, but in vain.

I have now seen all the country thoroughly as far as to Tyre. Sidon, Beirout and Damascus yet remain.

We have had delightful weather since we left Jerusalem.

To-morrow we leave for Sidon.

AT THE RIVER DAMUR, February 8.

We sailed around ancient Tyre yesterday morning, early, and saw the immense stone in the old wall. This stone is about 17 feet long, and nearly 7 feet thick. It was placed there thousands of years ago in the sea wall. We saw countless numbers of granite and marble columns of gigantic proportions tossed into the sea and broken on the shore. At ten a. m., we mounted our horses and rode along the beach to Sarepta, (1 Kings, 17:9,) where we lunched. We arrived at Sidon, the "mother of Tyre," at 5 p. m. Sidon is the most beautiful city in Syria; it is Oriental, yet the houses are neat, and its gardens are unrivalled for their fruits. I saw to-day banana trees 20 feet high. The city is on a head land, and behind are the snowy peaks of Lebanon.

Leaving Sidon at 10½ a. m. to-day, we lunched at Jonah's tomb.

We have just pitched our tents on the banks of the river Damur, only four hours' travel from Beirout, in Thompson's "Land and the Book." You will see the exact spot where we are encamped. We shall reach Beirout to-morrow, and after a few days shall go to Damascus and Balbec, thence return to Beirout and proceed to Smyrna, en route to Constantinople.

Yours,

W.

DEAR FATHER:

DAMASCUS, February 15, 1864.

My last to you was from the River Damur. We arrived at "Beirout" on Tuesday; it is the most active as well as the prettiest city in the whole of Syria. This superiority has been given to it through European influence; its antiquities, however, are of small importance, and do not require mention, a few broken columns of granite, and an old harbor in ruins. On Saturday I went in a small boat across the bay to "Dog River," and investigated the sculptures, cut there ages ago by the Egyptians and Assyrians, when their armies crossed the narrow road on the brow of the cliffs upon which these carvings are, three in number, and are thirty-one centuries old! Those of the Assyrians are six in number, and their age is twenty-five centuries! These sculptures are among the most remarkable antiquities I have ever beheld. I presume you have heard Rev. Dr. Bacon describe them as he saw them when he made his Eastern tour.

I arrived here by "Dilligens" last night at nine o'clock, having traveled since three a. m. The road is the only one in this country, and is as fine as the French could make it. We crossed Lebanon, and Anti-Lebanon; the summits of these mountains are covered with snow; our road lay through snow drifts of eight feet in depth, the wind was terribly cold, and so very strong that Mr. B— was nearly blown over a precipice by its tremendous force; the Dilligens was fast in the snow on the mountain, and we were obliged to get out to lighten it, at which time the wind caught Mr. B—, and carried him down hill. We were chilled severely. The height of Lebanon is 10,000 feet. "Damascus, the Queen of the East," is beautiful beyond description, in a rich plain, watered by the "Abana and Pharpar," better by far than the muddy Jordan, surrounded on every side by gardens, whose reputation for beauty has rivalled those of all others in the known world, and rightly deserves the appellation of "Queen;" her walls are the same now as they were long ages ago; they have never been demolished by any conqueror. She is mentioned in the beginning of Genesis, and is, perhaps, the oldest city in the world. She is Oriental in the extreme, more so than Cairo or Constantinople. The most wonderful objects to be seen in the Bazaars, is an European, with an European hat upon his head.

The bazaars are extensive, more so than those in Cairo. I have to-day visited the "street called Straight," the gate where St. Paul was "let down in a basket," and have seen the Lions of the City. The Boys and Women of Damascus are extremely beautiful; they are watched and veiled (I mean the women) by the old Turk, who is very jealous. Mahomet refused to come to Damascus, for he said he feared that the beauty of the city, and of the women, would make him unwilling to sigh for the heavenly "Houris" and Paradise. I noticed in the bazaars beautiful silk, and so cheap, that I was almost tempted to go into speculations in them. I am going to "Baalbeck" in a day or two; the road is said to be clear of snow, and passage is practicable. I have had a splendid visit to this city. Beautiful Damascus, when shall I see you again?
W—.

DEAR FATHER:

DAMASCUS, February 17, 1864.

You will be surprised to find that I am still in this city. I was up this morning at half-past three o'clock, ready to start for Baalbeck. After breakfast, at four o'clock, we discovered that on account of the immense quantities of rain that has been falling for three days, that the "Abana" had not only overflowed its banks, but, in consequence, this morning the whole city is almost under water; but we determined to make an effort to get to the starting place of the "Dilligens," a mile distant. We could obtain neither horse nor donkey, wheel-barrow, or any description of vehicle; it was dark as "Erebus;" the rain was falling in torrents; the hungry crowd of dogs made the scene like "Tartarus,"—this was the scene that opened upon us when we went to the hotel door,—the Dilligens was to start at this time, and if we were to go to Baalbeck at all, we must start in the quickest time possible. The only way that seemed practicable was to strip to our waist, and walk through the water and mud to the station. As we were in the act of stripping, the landlord told us to dress again, and that a servant should carry us "puss back" to a spot, from which, by a circuitous path, we could find the Dilligens. We were four in number, and thus we were backed over by an Arab. One servant went before with a lantern, another behind; we passed through narrow lanes, contending with savage dogs, that grow fat as scavengers without the city. The Mahometan Muzzein shouted to prayers, as we threaded the lanes and streets, "Come to prayer; prayer is better than sleep." We crossed the swollen Abana, and after all our fatigue and trouble, found that the Dilligens that ought to have arrived from Beirout last evening, had not made its appearance, accordingly we were obliged to return to the hotel by the same route by which we had come. To get now to Baalbeck is out of the question. We are in mid-winter, and reluctantly, I assure you, we must give up the trip, and return to Beirout. I have visited the many objects of interest here. Many of the houses are really palaces; the mosques are beautiful; everything here is beautiful. Damascus is well called "Pearl of the East;" but to attempt a description would be only a repetition of what you can read in the history of this city, so I will only refer you to them.

W—.

DEAR F—:

BEIROUT, February 21, 1864.

We returned here after a fatiguing ride of eighteen hours. The heavy rains have made the streams of Lebanon swell so that they have cut and washed the road so badly, that we were in danger of being thrown down into deep valleys, and over precipices, but we came safely. I have visited the Missions here. I saw Mr. Van Dyke, the Arabic scholar, and our very successful missionary; he was glad to welcome me, and explained the missionary work with great zeal. He has almost finished the translation of the Bible into Arabic; it has been his life work, and a noble one too. Dr. Thompson is in Egypt. Mr. Jessup, from the United States, is located here. These missionaries are doing a great work, and most successful. I am now waiting the arrival of the steamer, to embark in her for Constantinople, stopping, however, at Smyrna on our route to that city.

W—.

DEAR F—:

SMYRNA, February 27, 1864.

My last to you was from Beirut. We left that place in the Austrian steamer "Africa," for Constantinople. The moon was shining down brightly on the snowy heights of Lebanon, when we steamed away for Cyprus, and bade farewell to Syria forever, the next morning. We dropped anchor in the bay of Lamaca, the ancient Citium, on the western side of Cyprus. It was in this little city that Zeno the Stoic was born, where Cimon of Athens was an exile, and where St. Paul smote Elymas with blindness. In the bright blue sea near by, the beautiful goddess, Venus, was said to have come forth, and was called Aphrodite, from the white sea foam. Never did I expect to visit this scene of my college studies.

We left Cyprus at 4 a. m. on Tuesday, and at 3 a. m. on Thursday, we anchored at Rhodes. I went ashore for an hour, and visited the street where the Knights of St. John formerly lived, the old church now in ruins, and examined the spot where it is said that the Colossus once stood. This was all that was worth seeing in Rhodes.

This island has been inhabited and cultivated from remotest antiquity, and it was here that the grand old chevaliers of St. John developed themselves as an order, and from here they were expatriated by the Turks, in 1522. I was much interested in the place, as I had previously visited Malta, where the knights took up their abode after leaving Rhodes. We left Rhodes in the morning, and arrived at Smyrna the next day. We sailed along the coasts of Caria, where the famous Chimera of Mythologic times was chained. We passed countless islands, among which were Cos, where was the fountain of Hippocrates; Samos, noted for her nine poets, historians, and sculptors; Patmos, where John had his revelation; and Chios, often mentioned by Horace, in his odes. We also passed Halicarnassus, where Artemesia made the celebrated mausoleum for her husband, Mausoleus. The river Mæander, Ephesus and Miletus, we passed to the right. These places are all familiar, from my translating of Herodotus when studying.

Yesterday I succeeded in finding a Dragoman, an old Jew, who spoke about a dozen languages, to show us the sights in Smyrna. We went first to the bridge of the Caravans, a poor affair, spanning a little river or brook, on whose banks the immortal Homer was born, according to the accounts of the ancient Smyrniotes. Five other cities also claim his birth place. We saw hundreds of camels coming and going to Aleppo, Damascus, and Constantinople. Near by is a Turkish cemetery, the finest I have seen in the whole East. The Cyprus trees are the best I have seen. Near the bridge the path leads up Mount Pagus to an old castle on the summit, built by the Genoese. It is sadly ruined, but from one of its old towers I had a magnificent view of Smyrna, its many minarets glittering in the sunlight, the bay with its steamers and ships floating on its surface, like swans upon the smooth bosom of a lake, the grand towering mountains behind the city, and the rich cultivated plain beneath. I descended again to the city and visited the bazaars. They will do for European shops, but as Oriental bazaars they are not deserving the name. I have not seen one spark of Oriental life or character in Smyrna; it is almost entirely European from its trade.

Our missionary, Mr. Van Lennep, has just returned from America. And here I would just say, that our noble American missionaries, independent of the pleasure and profit obtained in visiting them, can give better information to the traveler respecting the history of the countries, and other interesting information, than can be otherwise obtained.

We start this evening for Constantinople, from which place you will next hear from me. W—.

DEAR FATHER :

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 2, 1864.

We left Smyrna on Saturday. We steamed down the bay, enjoying a magnificent view, the tall mountains in the back-ground, with the city beneath, growing fainter and fainter as we receded, the ships diminishing gradually from our view, until completely lost sight of, at eleven. We stopped for an hour in the bay of Mityline, on the eastern end of the celebrated island of Lesbos; here it was, if I recollect aright, that the fair Sappho lived and sung, and finally, unable to transport a certain youth with fervent love for her, and seeing him reject her flame, threw herself headlong into the sea. Uncle Henry has a fine painting of Sappho in the act of leaping from the rock. Theophrastus, the philosopher, was born here about 300 years B. C. The Latin poet, Horace, frequently mentions the delight produced by the "Lesbian Wine." We left Mityline, and at seven o'clock this morning stopped for an hour at the little island of Tenedos, mentioned by Virgil as being directly opposite the renowned City of Troy. We passed Troy, (very near it), where Agamemnon, Menelaus, Ulysses and Achilles stood arrayed against the Trojans, with the flower of the Grecian army. Here Priam, the venerable Trojan King, was cast, as Virgil tells us, "a headless trunk" on the sea-shore. Hector, the brave defender of the Trojans, was killed here, and dragged at the chariot wheels of the valiant Achilles, who, in turn, was wounded by an arrow from the bow of Paris, who had brought on the war by stealing Helen from Greece. Achilles died of the wound, for so the gods decreed it, that he should meet his fate before the walls of Troy by the hands of Paris, Priam's son. It was here that Æneas carried off his aged parent on his back, and sailed far away to Italy. Ulysses also was twenty years in his journey to Ithaca, the same journey can now be made in about three days by steamer. By visiting and seeing these places my college lessons are as well known to me now, as the Westminster Catechism is to you.

On our right we passed what the credulous call the tombs of Achilles, Petroelus, and others of the Grecian heroes who were slain in the siege of Troy. Passing these, it was not long before we entered the Hellespontus of mythologic times, now the Dardanelles. Alexander crossed here on a bridge of boats, when he went to subdue the Persian Empire, which he did with no great difficulty, as far as to the river Indus, where Phocus repulsed him, and where he lost his favorite horse "Bucephalus." Leander was accustomed to swim across the Hellespontus, every time the sun went down, to meet his mistress, Hero, who, when Leander had been drowned in the sea, to show her strong attachment for her lover, plunged into the waves, and met a similar fate to that of Leander. The "Argonautic Expedition," when it sailed from Argos, in Greece, to Colchis, to procure the Golden Fleece, passed through these same waters. Another interesting event occurred here, that of the celebrated and decisive battle of Argos Potamus, which was fought here on the Thracian side of the Hellespontus. In this battle the powerful arm and influence of the Athenians were forever broken; it was one of the fifteen decisive battles since history had its beginning. The Hellespontus is now called the Dardanelles, perhaps from Dardanus, the city where Priam was born. We stopped a little while at the little town of Dardanelles, and then steamed up the Straits at a rapid rate, passing fleets of ships wind bound. The Straits are, perhaps, three-fourths of a mile in breadth; the hills on either side being tall, and some of them as precipitous as if cut by a knife, while others are rounded and twisted into almost every shape. Numerous forts command every approach, and the whole is nothing but one extensive fortress, from Dardanelles to Gallipolis, the entrance into the sea of Marmora, "the Propontes" of ancient times. I do not wonder that Europe is jealous, and desires this Turkish empire to be divided up for themselves, for it is a magnificent possession, and great will be that nation which takes it from the Turks. Russia, England and France would each desire it, but they cannot settle it between them which shall have Constantinople, so the Turk holds on for the present.

We arrived at Gallipolis at one p. m., and remained until four p. m. It is a small town of no great importance, and devoid of interest. We sailed along the Sea of Marmora all night, and at seven a. m. sailed into the "Golden Horn," opposite Stamboul, and dropped anchor—our voyage was finished. About Constantinople, I do not know what to say, or where to commence, there is so much to be said, it would take me too long to attempt it, so I will only give my own impressions, and tell you what I have myself seen. To begin, I went on Monday, at nine a. m., over to Stamboul, saw the bazaars, the mosques of Sultan Mahomet, Sultan Achmet and the famous Agia Sofia, and saw all the interesting points in Stamboul. I then went over to Scutari in a "Caique," a small canoe-shaped boat peculiar to Constantinople, and visited the English cemetery, where the fallen brave of the Crimean War were buried. I then went to the Turkish cemetery, nearly filled with countless Turks, whose souls rest in Paradise, in the arms of "Houries." I saw Scutari and all that was there of interest. I returned to Pera; there I ascended an high tower, and had a magnificent view; Stamboul, with the Golden Horn, lay before me on one side, with its countless tall tapering minarets, behind me was Scutari, and around lay the tiled roofs of Pera. The beauty of this view can hardly be imagined—the city is magnificent and grand,—but, to my disappointment, not at all Oriental, it is more of an European city; most of the men are dressed in European costume. The women are not half so closely veiled as those of Syria and Egypt; the houses and bazaars are not Oriental; you do not see the turbaned multitudes as in Cairo, Jerusalem and Damascus; the streets are wide in comparison to Egypt and Palestine—the type of life here is European. The mosque of Sofia is fine, and is visited by all that come here; it is not so beautiful, externally, as some others. I have not time to speak of it particularly, nor of the others in the city. I saw the two long bridges that connect Pera and Stamboul opened yesterday, and the Sultan of Turkey swept through in a beautiful barge; he looks well, and as if he had the good things of this life to his heart's content.

You see I am writing a Journal. I have been up the Bosphorus; it was a glorious sail. We left the Seraglio on our left, and passing the Turkish frigates in the offing, we steamed away to the Black Sea. We wound around the headlands fringed with beautiful trees and shrubs, and their surface dotted with fine and unique residences of Turks and Europeans. The European side I thought more beautiful than the Asiatic. Fleets of tall masted ships passed through to and from the Black Sea. I cannot find words adequate to express the grandeur, loveliness and uniqueness of the sail on the Bosphorus. It was on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus that Jupiter assimilated himself to a white bull, and with the fair maiden, Europa, upon his back, swam across to Thrace, and hence the name of Europe was given to the western side. I should like to tell you all that I have seen, from day to day, during my stay in this city, but time will not permit. I must refer you, hereafter, to my journal; it has been one continual scene of enjoyment during my whole stay in the city, and I shall leave it with regret, never expecting again to behold it.

We have seen everything of interest in this city, and are ready to depart, with a knowledge of this great metropolis of the Eastern world. In some respects it is a repetition of the same scenes I beheld in Egypt and Syria. It seems, however, as if I had lived in another world and pre-existed, for it is so recently that I left home, that everything there seems fresh in remembrance, and these new scenes also so vivid, that everything is strange. In a few days we shall be in Greece. I ought, however, just say that the appearance of this city, and surrounding scenery, are fully equal to what they are represented to be; at a distance it looks so like the scenery of New York city and harbor and the Hudson River for twenty miles, that they appeared like old familiar scenes. The Sea of Marmora is very much like the harbor of New York; and with a neck of land, it looks like Staten Island. Scutari, on the Asiatic side, at a distance, is Brooklyn in its appearance. The scenery of the Bosphorus is so much like that of the Hudson, that an American, when viewing it, feels as if he was on the shores of our noble river at home. All the Americans that I have spoken to of it recognise the resemblance that I have mentioned.

DEAR FATHER:

ATHENS, GREECE, March 11, 1864.

We arrived here, from Constantinople, on Saturday, at sun-rise. We had a delightful passage; fine weather, as pleasant as at New Haven in June. Since we have been here, we have seen everything worthy of note. I will mention a few of the sights. First, we visited, of course, the ruined temples and Acropolis; the first one that we saw was that of Olympian Jupiter; fifteen columns only remain of the one hundred and twenty-four forming the peristyle; they are Corinthian, and of white marble. Close by is the Arch of Hadrian; it is very beautiful, although not made in the days of the prime of Athenian art. The column of Lysikrotes is not far distant. Beneath the Acropolis there has lately been excavated an ancient theater, which is of great interest to all travelers, for it is where the plays of Sophocles, Euripides and Æschylus used to be acted centuries ago; the stage is still there, and the seats for the Priests, with their names cut beneath. Fifteen thousand people could be seated on the benches. From the theater a path winds up to the gate of the Acropolis; upon entering which I felt awed at the ruins of beautiful statues and friezes, which, together with the ruined Propylaea and Parthenon, made the whole place one of intense interest. Athens' greatest men, her poets, her historians, her orators, and her philosophers have trod these same marble steps leading up to the lofty temples. There is one little temple near the Propylaea dedicated to Victory; she is represented in the act of stripping off her sandals, thus indicating that victory is to abide forever with the Athenians—a beautiful idea. On the summit of the Acropolis is the Erechthia, a temple built in honor of Erectheus, an old hero of Athens. It is this temple that has the Caryatides, or columns, in the form of women, captured from Caryæ, a Grecian city which declared for the Persian invaders of Greece.

Descending from the Acropolis, through the southern gate, and crossing a valley, we came to the prison of Socrates—the “prison” cannot be proved to be genuine. Near by is the place where justice was meted out centuries ago; it is the Pnyx, and sufficiently large to contain the whole of the citizens of Athens. The assembled citizens usually met at daybreak, as there was no protection from the sun.

Opposite is the “Hill of Mars,” where St. Paul preached to the “Men of Athens;” below is the Temple of Theseus, it is simple and plain, yet one of the most beautiful buildings ever erected. Inside of this temple is a collection of statues and friezes found in the ground, many of them are mutilated. In the city is the ruined gate of the “Agora,” and a colonade of the Emperor Hadrian, these form, I think, the most interesting part of the ruins; but to attempt to describe all would be futile. We made an excursion to the “Pentelicus,” from which the Parthenon and all the Grecian temples were hewn out; this mountain contains immense quarries of beautiful marble. Yesterday I went there, and climbed to the summit, and had a magnificent view of Attica and her hills, and of the plains of Marathon, where the battle took place between the Persians and Greeks; it is one of the most historic places in the world. I regret that I cannot go to Marathon; it takes a long time, and I am well satisfied that I have seen it. I have been to Eleusis, a small and very ancient city near Athens; it was there that the celebrated Eleusinian Mysteries took place. It is not known what these mysteries were, but it is thought that they were of a revolting and disgraceful nature; the ruins of the Temple of Ceres are there; the temple was larger than the “Parthenon.” The Bay of Eleusis is one of the finest in the world; it was near here that the Persians were defeated in the great naval battle of Salamis. We returned to Athens by the pass of “Daphne.” Athens, at present, is said to contain a population of 50,000. The houses are very fine, and its historical character one that every city in the world might envy in vain; the streets are the best I ever saw. The Parthenon is the most beautiful temple which the world has ever seen. When I was in the Parthenon I was among the most beautiful of ruins. I was where Demosthenese, Æschines, Pericles, Socrates, and hosts of historians, poets and orators stood ages ago. From my seat I could see the ruins of the grand temple of Jupiter Olympus in the plain below, the theaters of Bacchus and Herodes Atticus, etc., etc.

Where can the finger of man point to a more beautiful historical or imposing spot than this same ruined Parthenon. I have threaded the mazes and labyrinthic winding of the temples of the Ancient Egyptians, at Edfou, Thebes and Dendera, but nowhere did I behold such light, and delicacy and grace as surrounded me on every side, as at the Parthenon. It really seemed as if the gods themselves thronged from the Elisian fields to build these white marble temples of Athens. How often have I, when a school-boy, a novice in Latin and Greek, wondered how the Grecian temples looked, and especially the Parthenon. How often, when at College, a student, translating from the Greek, the orations of Demosthenes, the history of Heroditus, the tragedies of Euripides, Æschylis and Sophocles, and reading the history of the Athenians, their rise, power and downfall, did I wish that I could see that "Eye of Greece," where these great men lived, and where the fine arts were so successfully prosecuted; yet my wish has proved true. I am in the city of Themistocles, Aristides, Alcibiades and Pericles, Miltiades, Cimon and Seneca, where Marathon, Platea, Mantinea, Cheronea and Thermopylæ, were as familiar words to the Athenians as Lexington, Concord, Bunker Hill and Yorktown are to us at home; or as Gettysburg, Antietam, or Fair-oaks, will be to our descendants, if we succeed in crushing the most wicked rebellion that the world ever saw.

It was at "Mars Hill," however, perhaps that I was, if possible, more interested than elsewhere; where I stood in the same spot where "St. Paul," the undaunted, stood when he said to the men of Athens that they were too fond of Idols, when right before him stood the colossal statue of Minerva surmounting the Parthenon, and surrounded as he was on all sides by the statues of the numberless Gods of Grecian mythology. They ridiculed him, doubtless; he spoke on, and his words were heard by a few that believed in the Savior.

Do you wonder that I got enthusiastic at this beautiful spot? But I must hasten away to new scenes, and bid good-bye to classic Greece.

We leave for Naples in the French steamer to-morrow, the 12th.

W—.

DEAR F—:

ROME, March 26, 1864.

We left Athens on the 12th, and on the 15th arrived at Messina; remained there three days. Nothing peculiarly interesting at that place to the traveler. It is a city of about 150,000 inhabitants. We left in a little Italian steamer for Naples, and going down to "Reggio," where St. Paul stopped on his way to Rome, we remained there a few hours, and thence steering between Scylla and Charybdis, steered for Naples. The night we passed Stromboli, his summit was enthroned in smoke; and on the 18th, at noon, we passed between Sorrento and Capri into the beautiful Bay of Naples. After going to our hotel and obtaining rooms, we took a drive through the city and upon the Chiaja, the finest drive in the city, and from which the best view of the city and bay is to be had. No words can adequately express the beauty of the scenery about the city; I will not even attempt it. On Friday we went to the excavated city of Pompeii. We were exceedingly interested there to see the identical houses and streets just as they were when the inhabitants were there nearly eighteen hundred years ago. There are some fine houses still left, among which are those of "Sallust" and Diomede; the last is the most interesting feature in the city. His dining room looks almost as when he left it; his wine cellar is there with a few of his wine jars. He and a few of his household fled to the cellar when the city was destroyed, and they all perished; the marks of their struggles are still shown on the wall of the cellar. I could tell you a thousand interesting things about Pompeii, and Herculaneum too, but you have heard them all, and besides time will not allow me to narrate them all. While I was at Naples I visited the grotto of Pozzuoli—an exceedingly wonderful affair; it is cut through the solid rock for more than 2,000 feet, is 69 feet in height, and it is more than 2,000 years since it was executed; who made it, nobody knows. Near it is the celebrated tomb of Virgil. I visited it, and felt interested in viewing the spot where one of the best classic authors lay at rest. The tomb itself is nothing but a large dome, but the spot it covers is one of the most interesting in the vicinity of Naples. I also visited the grotto of "the dog," and saw a poor dog tormented by inhaling the carbonic acid gas which is so abundant in the cave. Last Monday I went to the foot of Vesuvius, hired a horse and guide and ascended to the top. I crossed over beds of hardened lava and witnessed one of the most desolate scenes my eyes have ever beheld. I arrived at the base of the cone, and dismounting from my horse, I climbed to the crater in thirty minutes. The ascent was the most difficult I have experienced. I walked around the burning crater and went down into it a few feet, but was driven back by columns of smoke which were constantly ascending. The best of all, as well as the most ridiculous, was my descent of the cone. My guide told me that we could descend in eight minutes. I accordingly prepared myself by buttoning my coat about me and rolling up my pants. The guide sprang down the mountain like a deer, I after him like lightning; I sank in the cinders about eight inches, and my headway was such that to stop was out of the question; I passed the guide, and in three minutes after leaving the summit, I was at the bottom of the cone. My old guide has been here for fifty years as guide on the mountain, and says he never knew a person to come down in so quick time. My view of Naples and the Bay from Vesuvius I shall never forget. I visited the museum at Naples, where are kept the mosaics, pictures, ornaments, etc., which were found in the ruined cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum. I saw the bread and fruit just as it appeared in the old city, and the bracelets and rings which were worn by persons now mouldered to dust. There are some valuable and interesting pictures in the museum. I should like to tell you about the bronzes and statuary, but have not the time. I really hope that the time will come when you can come and enjoy all that is permitted Mr. B and myself.

We left Naples on Wednesday. I was there one week, and saw all that was worth seeing in the city. I did not take the numerous excursions laid down in the book; it would have been pleasant enough, but all that I should have gained would have been some fine views of landscape. My object is to see all from which I can gain instruction. We work hard and fast; are up early and at work all day, and see every thing in one half the time that most people spend at the same objects. If we were traveling with ladies, of course we should occupy and lose more time. I will just mention an instance. We met a large party of English and Americans, and while they were busy looking up rooms and getting comfortably settled for several days, we had finished sight-seeing and ready to go. My recollections of Naples are as vivid as if I had remained there a month instead of one week. In our rambles we are not obliged to wait for others' motions, but adjust time to suit ourselves only.

Holy Week at Rome began on Tuesday. We arrived on Wednesday, and so many thousands of strangers were at the hotels, that we were obliged to take beds at a private house. It was with the greatest difficulty that some travelers could obtain rooms of any kind whatever in the city. The number of visitors now in the city is estimated at forty thousand. Since I arrived I have visited the ruins, including the Colliseum, the palaces of the Cæsars, the Forum; visited St. Peter's several times; been to the tomb of the Scipios; seen the "Dying Gladiator," at the Capitol; seen the magnificent galleries of paintings in the Borghese and Corsica palaces; been into the splendid churches of St. Paul and St. John Lateran; rode out on the Appian Way, and, in fact, have seen and done Rome, except the Vatican and dome of St. Peter's. There have been ceremonies for the past few days in the churches, but to-morrow is the celebration of Easter, which is one of the sights of the world. Sunday, I have just returned from St. Peter's, having witnessed the celebration of "High Mass" there by the Pope. Crowds of men, women and children began to throng the church at six in the morning; the crowds continued until as many as sixty thousand people had found their way to the church; even then it was not filled. At half-past ten the soldiers entered the great hall of the church. The Pope was carried in an immense chair on the shoulders of half a dozen men; he came along blessing the vast multitudes and passed within a few feet of me, so I had a good view of him; he is quite aged, and I think can hardly live much longer. He was afterwards seated in a superb chair, and Mass was celebrated. The singing was like that of another world; I cannot describe it, except by saying exquisite. At 12 m., the Pope pronounced his benediction and forgave all our sins; thus closed the celebration of the Roman Catholic Easter. I am glad that I am here, and was able to see the Pope and princes and dignitaries of the church at worship. I shall remain here a few days longer and then leave for Florence, where you will next hear from me. I wish to explore the Catacombs here, but I saw so many in Egypt, that I have no great curiosity for them. Mr. B. thinks that he shall never be at a loss to interest his church when he returns to America, especially in relating his experiences of Palestine and Rome. W.

DEAR F—:

FLORENCE, April, 1864.

My last was from Rome. After writing you, I climbed to the top of St. Peter's, even going into the ball; the view was charming. I went through and through the halls of the Vatican, and no words can adequately express the beauty of the paintings and frescoes and statues—the "Wrestlers of Canova," the "Perseus," the "Antinous," the "Lacoon," and the "Apollo Belvidere," alone, are worth crossing from America to see. We went, on leaving Rome, to "Civita Vecchia," where we took the steamer to Leghorn. We passed Elba, Corsica and Sardinia, arriving at Leghorn in the evening. Nothing of special interest detaining us at Leghorn, we left the next day for Florence, via Pisa. Of course we ascended the "Champanile," or "the famous Leaning Tower of Pisa," of which everybody has heard so much; went into the "Duono," or Cathedral, and into the Baptistry. The latter is a remarkable building; the echo inside is the finest to be heard in the world. The Campo Santo is well worth a passing visit; the famous frescoes of Hell, by Orcagna, are ridiculous in the extreme. There are other places of interest at Pisa, but the above mentioned are the best. On leaving Pisa we went by rail up the fertile valley of the Arno, passing through Pistora, where pistols were first invented, hence their name. We arrived here in the evening. We have visited the "Uffizi Gallery," and were much interested in the fine statuary, especially with the beautiful "Venus de Medeci." The paintings are of the very best order, and by the Old Masters, as are those of the Pitti Palace. The Palace Vecchio is interesting as being the one built by the Medicis. Savonarolo's prison is in this palace. The Duono, Campomille and Baptistry are magnificent. The Cacine is one of the pleasantest public promenades I have ever seen. The Boboli Gardens are magnificent. Sunday I went to the Protestant Cemetery, (after being at the American chapel,) saw the last resting place of Theodore Parker and Mrs. Browning. To-day I drove to the little village of Fresole; it is a beautiful spot; the view is unrivalled. We went to the Palace of Beronarotti, where there are many mementoes of the renowned Michael Angelo. I called upon our friend, Mead, the artist, and was much pleased with his cast of "The Returned Soldier;" his statues of "Echo" are splendid. After viewing the various objects of interest here, I shall be off for Genoa, Turin, the Lakes of Como and Maggiore and Milan, and to Venice. Italy is beautiful; the climate delightful; the skies of a heavenly blue; in fact the whole country is little else than a paradise.

My next will be from Venice; till then, good-bye.

W.

DEAR F—:

VENICE, April 17, 1864.

My last was from Florence. After writing you, I visited the "Pitti Palace," where are kept some of the gems of the best sculptors and artists the world has ever seen. I wish I could tell you of the bronzes, the marbles and paintings on exhibition in the galleries of Florence; but I must omit doing so now, for I have so many things else to see and tell you of. I, however, keep my journal well written up, and when I return, perhaps I may publish a "Book of Travels;" who knows but I may finally become a (poor!) author, instead of a merchant?

While at Florence, I went to the Museum, where are collected all the old books, charts, and mathematical instruments of the famous old Galileo; I was, of course, greatly interested in that collection. One of the most interesting objects in Florence is the chapel in the Church of St. Lorenzo. The statues there are by Michael Angelo—his "Madonna," "St. Lorenzo a Medici," one of "Night," and another of "Morning." The Medici Chapel, close by, is magnificent. In the Egyptian Museum, I saw the "Last Supper," a famous piece by Raphael. There are hundreds of very interesting objects that I should like to tell you of, but I must hasten on. I left Florence by rail to Pistoga, then by diligence to Bologna; visited the Academy of "Fine Arts;" saw Raphael's "Cecilia," Domenichino's "St. Agnes," Guido's "Samson," and other paintings, too many to mention. Saw the famous two leaning towers, Campo Santo, Church of St. Petronio, the Church of St. Domenico, and, in fact, all that was worth seeing in the city. I was disappointed in Bologna; it was not beautiful, but just such a place that you would wish to leave as soon as you got there. Left Bologna, and passing Modena, where is kept the "old bucket," we stopped at Parma, saw the Cathedral Campionille, the Royal Gardens, and the Farnese Palace, where there is a superb library of 150,000 books, Luther's Psalter, letters from Galileo and Buonaparte, Correggio's frescoes, Canova's statue of "Concord," and abundance of bronzes and paintings are to be seen in this palace. On the 9th, at noon, we left for Genoa via Pracenzia; spent the Sabbath there, and on Monday left for Turin. While at Genoa we visited the Gardens, the Lighthouse, the Cathedral, and the beautiful Church of the Annunciation. The Palaces of Genoa are indeed famous; the best are the Babbi, the Pallovincini, the Doria and Dwrazzo, famous for the staircase. We were interested much in visiting the above. The most interesting things in Genoa, to me, are the letters of Columbus to Spain, when he was in the West Indies, they bear dates of 1502-4; there is also to be seen an old letter-case, which he took with him on his first journey to discover America, 1492. Poor man, he died ignorant of the fact that he had discovered a New World. Genoa has a population of 150,000, and is literally a city of Palaces. On Monday we went to Turin, Victor Emmanuel's capital, arrived at nine p. m. I spent three days there, during which time we visited the Paintings at the "Castello;" Carlo Dolces' "Virgin" is there; it is 200 years old, but looks as fresh as if just painted. Victor Emmanuel's Palace is one of the finest in Europe; the floors and furniture are superb; the Cathedral, near by, and the collection of antique weapons are very fine, better than those at Malta. The Cemetery at Turin is extensive. The principal objects of interest at Turin can all be seen in a few hours; but the city itself requires two or three days. We have not seen so fine a city since leaving America; its cleanliness and regularity of streets is astonishing. The view of the Alps from the Capuchin Convent, at Turin, is, perhaps, the finest in the world. We left Turin for Milan, passing over the battle-fields of Montebello and Magenta, and not far from the Solferino field; also the battle-field of Marengo. We stopped on the way to Milan at Droua, from which place we took a steamer, and sailed the whole length of Lake Maggiore; the scenery on this lake is so beautiful and superb that I have no power to do it justice. It is fifty miles long, three broad, and on either side mountains, almost hiding themselves in the clouds. The sides of the mountains are covered with peasant's houses, all making an extensive picture, which can only be appreciated by being seen. We spent the night at the upper end of the lake, and the next morning, at four o'clock, left for Droua, thus sailing twice the entire length of the lake. Arriving at Droua, we left for Milan, where we arrived at noon. Milan is a city of about 200,000, and very far from being a beautiful city, as it is generally represented; the houses are old, but the Cathedral is wonderful for its beauty and delicacy of proportion. There are in and upon it five thousand statues, all of marble; the view from the top is very beautiful. The most famous thing at Milan is "The Last Supper," a fresco by Leonardo de Vinci; it is much faded and worn, but even now is one of the most wonderful frescoes in existence. The "Biblioteca Ambrosinia" is interesting, as containing old manuscripts, Thorwaldsen Medallions, and a famous fresco by him of "Christ crowned with thorns;" there are also here a manuscript of Homer, of the third century; a letter of Ariosto, one of Galileo, an old Koran, and a lock of Lucrezia Borgia's hair. The "Brera" is a celebrated picture gallery, and has in the rooms valuable frescoes, and inestimable paintings by Raphael, and also by nearly all of the old masters. The "Arch of Peace," and the Amphitheatre, built by Napoleon I., are worth a visit; the latter will contain 30,000 spectators. From Milan I took the cars, on Friday, for Como, twenty-eight miles distant, from which place we ascended Lake Como, the most beautiful sheet of water my eyes have ever beheld. The mountains about the lake are almost unearthly, they have such an air of stillness and majesty, that they appear to belong to another sphere. I visited the celebrated villas at Bellagio, half way up the lake, and the scenery was enrapturing in the extreme. At night we returned to Como, and at eight p. m. were again at Milan. Yesterday we took the cars for "La Belle Venezia," and having passed through Brescia, Bergamo (Bergamot hears?), Verona (Romeo and Juliet), and Padua, we arrived here at ten p. m., put our baggage into a Gondola, and ourselves getting in afterwards, we were rowed up the Grand Canal in the still night, just as the moon was peeping out from behind the clouds. Venice is an anomaly when compared to other cities—no horses, no carriages, canals, streets (few built upon), seventy-two islands, one hundred and forty-five canals, three hundred and fifty bridges, population 150,000. More hereafter. This is a splendid tour through Europe that Mr. B and myself are taking. I tell all I have seen in few words. I hope not too few; description of the most that I see is impossible; time will not allow of it. Will write again, and give you my ideas of Venice.

DEAR F—:

MUNICH, BAVARIA, May 1, 1864.

My last was from Venice, about a fortnight ago. I had then just arrived at that city. We remained there a week, during which I saw all the interesting features of the city. You were, of course, aware of the immense number of canals which render Venice, to most travelers, the most beautiful and superb city in Europe; no words are possible to describe the magical appearance of the numberless palaces and churches as they appear in the pale moonlight; in fact, it looks just as it did when the old Doges used to rule with their iron rods. The chief objects of interest are the churches of San Marco, built in 1043; Maria Salute, Georgio Maggiore, the Mosaic manufactory, the Glass Works, the old Palaces of former ages, the Bridge of Sighs, the Prisons beneath the bridge, the Rialto bridge, and the Ducal Palace; at the last place are to be seen the famous "Lions' Mouths," where the Citizens of the Republic were secretly denounced by their enemies; in the Council Chamber are all the Doges on canvass; there is also a painting by Tintoretto, 84 feet by 34 feet, the largest in the world. The dark dismal dungeons under the Bridge of Sighs are very interesting. Before closing, let me describe a Gondola. Gondalas are to Venice what donkeys are to Egypt, and what horses are to Syria; without a gondola Venice would be robbed of all its singularity. It is a very long narrow boat, painted black, in the middle is a sort of carriage top, black as night; beneath this latter are seats usually for four persons. Byron said that "a Gondola looked just like a coffin slipped into a canoe." I was sadly disappointed when I saw one for the first time, there is nothing picturesque or beautiful about it. It is rowed by one Gondolier.

I left Venice on the 22d, and started for Vienna, the gay capital of the Austrian empire, it is distant five hundred miles. We stopped the first night at Trieste, at the head of the Adriatic; it is the head-quarters of the Austrian steamers. Nothing of especial interest there. The following morning we took cars for Gratz, two hundred and forty miles distant, arrived at half-past eight p. m., and arrived at Vienna the following day at five p. m. You may think we are moving too rapidly, but you must remember that we are traveling without ladies, consequently we have all our own time. Between Vienna and Trieste is the celebrated railroad, the best in Europe, and superior to any in the world; it is more than three hundred miles in length, and is built in valleys and on lofty mountains, running along the edge of steep precipices, and there are more than thirty tunnels cut through the solid rock. The scenery is superb. I remained at Vienna three days; saw the great Belvedere painting gallery (superb), the hearts, bowels and bodies of Austrian Kings and Queens preserved in urns (horrid idea). The cathedral, churches, library (interesting), museum of natural history, geology, botany, mineralogy, etc., etc. The largest Cameo in the world is here, at Vienna, twenty-six inches in circumference. The Imperial stables are magnificent. "Schonbrung," the Emperor's summer residence, is one of the most charming places I have ever seen; there is a fine collection of wild beasts there. I left nothing unseen at Vienna, and on the 27th went down the Danube as far as Presburg, the old capital of Hungary; the sail was delightful; remained at Presburg over night; visited the eminence where the Hungarian Kings were formerly crowned; returned next day to Vienna, and the following day went to Salsburg, where I stayed one day, visited the famous Salt Mines near by, they are very remarkable; in the heart of a mountain there is a large lake in the interior of the mines, upon which we sailed in a small boat; it was lighted up by over three hundred lights. This morning we left Salsburg and came to Munich, the capital of Bavaria. I will write you again, and tell you about Munich. I shall go into Switzerland about Wednesday, and when I am through there I shall go down the Rhine, visiting all places of interest, proceed to Holland and Belgium, and so on to Paris. I shall not go to Dresden or Berlin; they are the repetition of Vienna and Munich. Gold is "awful" high; you will be obliged, I see by New York papers, to pay about 2.50 per cent. for my drafts—it is an expensive time to travel.

W—.

DEAR FATHER:

PARIS, May 21, 1864.

My last to you was from Munich, since which I have been occupying my time in sight seeing. From Munich, a few days after writing you, we went to Linden, on Lake Constance; thence to Constance, Schaffhausen, to view the celebrated "Falls of the Rhine," Zurich, Zug Lucerne, to Interlachen, by the Brunig Pass of the Alps, to Berne, Lausanne and Geneva. I was delighted with Switzerland; did not go to Chammoix, on account of my lungs, which troubled me. From Geneva to Neufchatel, Basle, Strasbourg, Baden-Baden, Heidelberg, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Mayence, down the Rhine to Bonn and Cologne; I do not think the scenery equal to the Hudson; from Cologne to Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Antwerp, Brussels, Waterloo, and am now in Paris, where unexpectedly I have just met my sister and party, not having heard that they had left home in the United States. I will not attempt to describe the places I have visited since leaving Munich. It seems from the length of time we have been traveling, and the great distance and variety of countries we have visited, that, having now arrived at Paris, we are almost home. We shall remain here a while, and then, visiting England, Scotland and Ireland, shall embark for America. It will be useless for me to describe the sights of this city, or of the other cities we shall visit; that has been done by others so often, that my description would be hardly worth your reading. My journal, however, I shall continue, and when I return will refer you to that. I hope my letters have been of some interest to you and the family. I have written in a rambling sort of way, just as things have appeared to me, using my own language, etc., etc.

Yours,

WILLIAM.

NOTE J.

NEW HAVEN, April 1, 1859.

DEAR UNCLE THOMAS:

I have been told that you would like to have an outline of my different foreign tours, for the genealogical account of the Trowbridge family which you are about to have printed. I have therefore made as brief a sketch as possible from the manuscript pages of my journal, which I hope may answer the required purpose.

In September, 1858, I formed one of a party composed of my father, mother, sister Mary, and cousin E. Hayes Trowbridge, which sailed from New York, in the steamship "Fulton," for Havre, where we arrived early in October. Our voyage was devoid of any particular interest aside from that which must always attend a first experience of sea life, and such an experience it was to the larger part of our company. Arriving in France, we began our journey by a short but most agreeable visit to the ancient city of Rouen, continuing thence to Paris, where we remained a month enjoying the various sights of that magnificent capital and its environs. Early in November we commenced our progress southward, breaking the long journey to Marseilles by a two days' visit to Lyons. We remained a few days at Marseilles waiting for a suitable traveling carriage in which to continue our route to Nice, as in those days the railway had not been constructed, and arrived in that city after a delightful three days' drive through some of the most beautiful scenery of Southern France. At Nice we spent ten days realizing for the first time all that we had heard of the charms of the Mediterranean coast, and at the close of our sojourn, again resuming our carriage for five days along the magnificent Cornice Road, to which any description fails to do justice. The close of the fifth day found us at the gates of Genoa. We had intended to make a very brief stay in this city, but, owing to illness, we were detained there for three weeks. During that time we became thoroughly acquainted with the many objects of interest in the city and its surroundings, which crowd upon the traveler in a hurried visit, but which we had time to enjoy at our leisure. We were not sorry, however, to be again en route, and embarked, with pleasure, on a small Sardinian steamer, the evening of the 21st of December, for Naples. The day following our departure from Genoa, we spent in the harbor of Leghorn; starting again upon our voyage the ensuing evening, and reaching Civita Vecchia, the port of Rome, the morning of the 23d. Dawn of the 24th found us entering the Bay of Naples. The day was just breaking over one of the most beautiful scenes in the world, and we hurried up on deck that we might miss none of its glories. The variety of light was one of the most striking features of the spectacle. Vesuvius was in full eruption, and cast the lurid light of its baleful fires athwart the quiet waters of the bay. The moon was slowly sinking, its pale beams reflecting with the myriad twinkling stars in our steamer's wake. The encircling lights of the city were yet unextinguished, and all were gradually growing dim before the struggling glories of the rising sun. A brief half hour of enjoyment brought us to the landing, and an equally short space of time found us comfortably located in an hotel overlooking the bay, and the purple islands of Capria and Ischia in the distance. Three weeks of extreme enjoyment followed in visiting the churches and palaces of the city, the ruins of Pompeii and Herculaneum, the circle of interesting and historical places bordering the bay, and finding a fitting ending in the renowned temples of Paestum. These ruins excited our enthusiasm to such a degree that a visit to Athens was spoken of, as we sat upon the steps of one of the temples; and before our return to Naples, a still longer journey was talked of, and Constantinople took its place as one of the cities to be visited early in January. My father, cousin and myself sailed from Naples in a French steamer, arriving at Messina after a fourteen hours' voyage. We remained a few hours on shore, driving through the crowded thoroughfares of the Sicillian town, and embarking on another French steamer, began our voyage to Athens. We had sufficient opportunity to visit the many points of interest in the Grecian capital, and, greatly pleased with our visit, resumed our journey to Constantinople.

At Constantinople we spent ten days, owing much of our pleasure and comfort to the kind attentions of the American Minister, Mr. James Williams, of Tennessee. Through his influence, permits were obtained to visit palaces and mosques and Turkish places of worship otherwise closed to travelers. A trip across the Golden Horn to Scutari, and an excursion up the Bosphorus to the mouth of the Black Sea, were among the enjoyments planned for us by Mr. Williams and successfully carried out by his influence. Our visit closed with a superb spectacle—the progress of the Sultan to his favorite Mosque on the Turkish Sabbath, surrounded by his guards, ministers, and beauties of his harem. Scarcely had we watched the last of the cortege disappear from view, before we were hurried to the boat awaiting us at the landing to take us to the French steamer on which we were to sail for Smyrna. We reached Smyrna in safety, and remained two days in the city, visiting all that was of interest, and being hospitably entertained by the American missionaries. At the close of our visit, we embarked on another French steamer, and after a somewhat unpleasant voyage, reached the island of Malta. A day in the city of Valetta and its environs, enabled us to see much that was curious; and on a stormy evening, early in February, we steamed out of the magnificent harbor on our return to Messina and Naples. Our voyage that night was not unattended with danger, and it was with thankful hearts that we saw the sun rise over the snow crowned summit of Mount Ætna. Twelve hours more found us again, after passing in full view of Stromboli, in active operation in the harbor of Naples, having made this most interesting tour in four weeks. Two days later, we, with our party now complete, sailed for Civita Vecchia, the port of Rome. Six weeks passed quickly away amid all the delights of the eternal city. The time was full of excitement; rumors of war were astir; and so imminent seemed at times the danger, that it was often discussed whether we should attempt any more prolonged journeyings in Italy. We, however, decided to, at least, endeavor to carry out our original plans, and left Rome, late in March, by carriage, for Florence. The charms of a journey by this slow means of progress, in this loveliest season of the year, for Italy, were fully realized by us all, and, regretfully, on a golden April evening, we entered the gates of Florence.

Our visit to Florence was full of excitement, for, during our stay, a bloodless revolution took place. The Grand Duke was forced to fly from his capital, never to return. The existing government was overthrown, and Florence pronounced for Victor Emanuel. War between Italy and Austria was declared; troops were hurrying to the frontier, and the army of Napoleon was on the way to the rescue, as it was then supposed, of Italy. The names of the King of Sardinia and the Emperor of the French were on every one's lips, and even we, foreigners, could not avoid sharing in the enthusiasm which all were feeling. The political condition of the country, however, interfered with our plans, and, most regretfully, we found ourselves obliged to give up our projected visit to Milan and Venice, and turn our faces again toward Genoa. The latter city we reached by sea from Leghorn, and found the harbor crowded with French men-of-war, discharging their living cargoes of troops, who were to be joined by other regiments coming into Italy. It was, at first, thought impossible for us to continue on to Turin, and from thence across Mont Cenis to Geneva, as the trains had been seized by the government for the transportation of troops and ammunition. Nearly all our traveling companions of the winter preferred leaving Genoa by sea for Marseilles; but, unwilling to be still further interrupted in the prosecution of our plans, we determined to await events, the hope of reaching Geneva as we had arranged. Our patience had not to endure a severe test, for on the afternoon after our arrival at Genoa, our courier informed us that a passenger train, positively the last, as indeed it proved to be, was to leave at sunset for Turin. Glad of so speedy an opportunity, we availed ourselves of it, and left Genoa, which was filled with soldiers and munitions of war, only to meet other regiments at every station, apparently full of enthusiasm and eager to meet the much hated Austrians.

Night had fallen before we reached Turin. The city was brilliantly lighted, and soldiers seemed to be the sole occupants of the street. Every sight and sound told of coming war, and we, the ladies of the party, wished ourselves far from the scene of so much excitement. The day after our arrival at Turin being Sunday, we decided to remain until Monday, and then, if not prevented, go on to Susa, across Mont Cenis, and pass on to Switzerland. Sunday evening proved a very exciting time. French regiments of artillery poured into the city for hours, weary with their march across Mont Cenis, but brightening up into enthusiasm at the tumultuous greeting which they received. Every window and balcony was crowded with ladies, who strewed flowers upon the heads of the officers, and joyfully waved handkerchiefs as the weary foot soldiers came in sight. The following morning Victor Emanuel left his capital for the seat of war, and evening found us too quitting Turin, and in the darkness of the night, we arrived, by railway, at Susa, at the foot of Mont Cenis. There one of the most striking scenes that we had ever witnessed lay before us. Thousands of French soldiers were encamped near the railway. The lurid light of torches, illuminating their pale faces, and gleaming bayonets, while several companies were marching by the inn to take their places in the train for Turin. The small waiting room was crowded with officers; but through the hours we were waiting, we did not hear one rude word, or witness an unseemly act. We stood at the door watching with a mournful interest the long lines of soldiers filing past, and several times offered wine and bread, which were thankfully received, and twice purses were opened and remuneration offered. At midnight our diligence, with its twelve mules, was ready for us, and as our party was sufficiently large to occupy the whole of it, we made ourselves as comfortable as circumstances permitted. Slowly we toiled up the steep ascents, and wearily passed the hours till dawn. Morning, however, broke over a most interesting scene—the snow was falling, and the heights above us were white with the descending storm. But, apparently sweeping down upon us, from the same heights, was an unbroken line of soldiers, wearing the uniform of France. The old stories of the First Napoleon's campaigns came to us with the vividness of reality, and we seemed to see the Great General himself crossing the sunny Alps. There were officers on horseback, artillery wagons, vivandiers, sometimes walking or resting on the baggage piled in the wagons. Many soldiers were sitting by the wayside; others were drinking from their flasks and eating their crusts as they marched. The entire day we passed between these ranks of men, many of whom were destined never to return to France. We gave wine and bread to those who seemed most in need, receiving cheers and thanks in return. We noticed the number of the regiments, many of which we read of afterwards, and the remains of which we were destined to see, shattered, it is true, but victorious.

We were fortunate in having as a member of our party an English officer who had passed through the Indian rebellion, and whose military knowledge gave an additional pleasure to a scene perhaps the most thrillingly interesting we had ever witnessed. Weary with excitement, we finally reached the foot of the mountain, and at Chambéry took the train for Geneva. Midnight found us established in an hotel on the borders of Lake Geneva, and morning broke over the quiet lake and city which no rumors of war troubled or alarmed.

A week at Geneva gave us time to rest after our exciting journey from Italy, and towards the end of May we left that city for Vienna, visiting en route Zurich, the Falls of Schaffhausen, passing up Lake Constance, stopping at Munich, Salzburg, Linz, and descending the Danube to Vienna. At the different Austrian towns on our route, we found ourselves again in the midst of preparations for war. Regiments were marching to join the main body of the army; and the beautiful white uniforms of the Austrian soldiers became as familiar to us as the less showy ones of the French and Sardinians had been but a month before. At Vienna we witnessed the departure of the Emperor Francis Joseph for the seat of war, and the leave taking between him and the royal family. Ten days passed too quickly amid the pleasures of the Austrian capital, and once more we found ourselves en route for Prague. A few days in the Bohemian city, and then we found rest again at the baths of Toplitz, in Bohemia, where we passed three quiet weeks. From Toplitz we followed the Elb to Dresden, and from the Saxon capital pursued our journey to Leipzig and Berlin. From the Prussian capital we visited Potsdam, and the gentlemen of our party witnessed at that place a magnificent review of a portion of the Prussian army by the King and Crown Prince. From Berlin we went to Hanover, passing the Fourth of July in that city. From Hanover we entered Holland, and made a most interesting tour through a portion of that singular kingdom. We remained several days in Amsterdam, going from that city to the Hague, visiting all that was most famous in the Dutch capital, and passing on to Rotterdam, and from thence to Antwerp; again, from Antwerp to Brussels, where the chief object of interest was the field of Waterloo; and it was on our way out to that memorable spot that we first heard that the brief but splendid war which we had so interested ourselves in following, had come to an abrupt close, and that peace was declared.

From Brussels we continued our tour to Aix-la-Chapelle, from thence to Cologne, where we took a steamer to ascend the Rhine, stopping a day at Coblenz, and another at Mayence, where we took the train for Frankfort-on-the-Maine. After a day in the latter city, we again took the train for the quaint old city of Heidelberg. A few days passed delightfully in visiting the grand old castle, university, etc., and then we started upon what proved one of the most delightful of our experiences of foreign travel—a tour through Switzerland. Entering Switzerland at Basle, we spent one day and night in that ancient city. The day passed in seeing its curious relics of by-gone times, and the evening on the piazza of the hotel, which overhangs the rushing Rhine. From Basle to Berne was but a continuation of the pleasure, and the view we obtained from the terrace of Berne of the magnificent range of the Bernese Alps, was but a foretaste of what was in store for us in our journey through the different Alpine passes which we were enabled to make.

From Basle our Swiss journey may be said to have fairly begun; for the evening of the day of our departure from Berne found us located in a charming Swiss inn at Interlachen, directly in the face of the Jungfrau, whose snowy summit was piercing through the clouds and turning golden in the light of the setting sun. After a few delightful days in this most beautiful village, my father, cousin and myself, accompanied by an excellent Swiss guide, left Interlachen, by carriage, for Lauterbrunnen, where, after having seen the remarkable Staubbach fall, we mounted horses and commenced the ascent of Wengern Alp. Crossing this fine pass, we reached Grindelwald at sunset, in time to see the glazier, for which this village is famous. The following morning found us again in the saddle, and although the ascent and descent of the superb Rosenlain pass was difficult, we thought ourselves amply repaid for all our fatigue by the scenery of the higher Alps. From Merglingen we continued our journey on mule back to Lucerne, arriving on the borders of that beautiful lake at sunset. From Lucerne we made the ascent of the Righi, passing a night on its summit, and being so fortunate as to witness a thunderstorm in the mountains below us while we were in tranquility above. A fine sunset and a superb sunrise, which alone repaid the toil of the ascent, and the very early rising before dawn. The following day we descended and sailed up the Lake of the Four Cantons to Altorf, famous for the exploits of William Tell. From Altorf we made the ascent of Mount St. Gothard, spending a night in the hospice on its summit. The following day we drove down its magnificently engineered road till within sight of the first Italian station. Returning, we made the Furca pass, pursuing our way down the valley of the Rhone, visiting the Rhone glacier to Martigny. From Martigny we made the ascent of Mount St. Bernhard, spending a night with the monks in the hospice on its summit. The following day we descended to Martigny, and twenty-four hours after left that village for Chammoni by the pass of the Tite Noir. Three days at Chammoni enabled us to cross the Mer de Glace, and make the usual round of excursions through some of the most wonderful scenery of Switzerland. We also witnessed the fete given to a party of Russian scientific men after their successful ascent of Mont Blanc.

We left Chammoni for Geneva, where we were joined by other members of our party. Our stay in Geneva was very brief, as, in common with all other foreigners, we shared in the desire to hurry on to Paris in order to witness the triumphal entrance of the victorious French army, and the review of the troops by Louis Napoleon, in the Place Vendome, on the 15th of August.

We left Geneva on the 13th of August, arriving in Paris, after many delays, at noon on the 14th. Our rooms had been engaged for some time at the Hotel de Louvre, and most fortunate, as it resulted, for the crowds that filled the city had not in many cases a roof to cover them. On the 15th, the most superb military display which had been seen in Europe since the days of the First Napoleon, was witnessed by the countless throngs which had rushed to Paris to be present on the occasion. The Place Vendome, arranged like a gigantic amphitheatre, was filled with those who had been fortunate enough to procure places, and we were happy enough to be included in the number. Our places were sufficiently near the balcony on which the French Empress sat, with the Prince Imperial and her attendant ladies, to enable us to watch her movements throughout the review. The Emperor sat motionless on his horse below this balcony, while eighty thousand soldiers filed past him. It was an overwhelming sight; many of the regiments which we had seen complete on Mont Cenis, passed before him with sadly diminished numbers; and it was pitiful to see the wounded, who throughout life would have to bear the marks of that terrible campaign. Austrian banners, pierced with balls, waved proudly over them, and cannon, taken from the enemy, were drawn past in black and seemingly unending lines. The interest to us was intense, as we had, as it were, witnessed the beginning of the war, and were also present at its most triumphant conclusion.

Our original plan had been to go to England and Scotland after the August fetes in Paris. But illness again interfered with our projects, and we remained at the Hotel de Louvre until the early part of September, when, as it was impossible for the entire party to cross the Channel, my cousin and I found some friends who were about to make the same journey that we had planned, and at the close of the first week in September, crossed from Boulogne to Folkstone, and passed on at once to London. At London we remained ten days, seeing all that was possible, in so short a time, of the English capital, and then journeyed to Leamington, from which point we visited Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwick Castle, and the ruins of Kenilworth. From thence we went to Chatsworth, the famous seat of the Duke of Devonshire, and passed a day in Sheffield. From Sheffield we continued our journey into Scotland, visiting Edinburgh, where we remained a week; saw the Castle of Stirling, made a hasty tour through the Trosachs, crossed Loch Catrine and Loch Lomond, spent two days in Glasgow, returning to Edinburgh, and from thence to London. The close of the first week in October found us again in Paris, and on the 15th of that month, my cousin and myself sailed from Havre for New York, in the steamer "Arago," arriving there on the 2d of November, 1859.

Second Voyage—(Around the World.)

On the 13th of August, 1863, I sailed from New York, in the steamer "Ocean Queen," under the care of Mr. and Mrs. O. Hoffman Burrows, for Aspinwall, this being the first stage of a voyage to Hong Kong, where I purposed spending three months with my sister, Mrs. Silas E. Burrows, Jr. My sister had been living three years in China, and it had been decided that the voyage and residence, for a time, in a mild climate, would, perhaps, restore me to health, to which I had been for some time a stranger. The "Ocean Queen" by no means merited her high-sounding title. In those days the Pacific Railway had no existence, save in the brains of its projectors, and the only means of reaching Aspinwall, by sea, was in one of the Vanderbilt steamers, which were uncomfortable, in every sense of the word. It was August, and intensely hot, and we numbered, all told, when we left New York, eight hundred souls. Of course the larger part of the passengers belonged in the steerage; but, apparently, the fact was ignored, as we of the first class were obliged to share our deck accommodations, during the day, with all others; and at night our deck state-rooms were rendered most unpleasant by the proximity of women and children, who, unable to sleep in their crowded quarters, were allowed to encumber the deck to our very doors. But as all disagreeable things have an end, so had this voyage to Aspinwall, and on the tenth day after our departure from New York, we landed among the cocoanut palms of this forlorn tropical town. Forlorn as it might be, it was at least terra firma, and afforded us glimpses of tropical scenery and life, under different aspects from any with which we had, hitherto, been familiar. Our stay in Aspinwall was, happily, of the shortest, and was comprised in the time which it took us to pass from the steamer to the railway station. The cars we found commodious and cool, with bamboo seats, and in two hours from the time of our landing we were on our way across the Isthmus. We were three hours and a half in crossing, during which brief time we realized more of the magnificence of tropical growth and scenery than we had learned from all the books on the subject which we had ever read. That passage of the Isthmus, brief as it was, has left with me a picture of nature's resources, and overflowing luxuriance, such as I shall never forget. At the end of our journey the city of Panama came in sight, but we had no time to enter it, as night was at hand, and our steamer, the "Golden Age," waited our coming, three miles down the Bay. After a few moments delay, we, eight hundred in all, were crowded on to small steam tugs, and in the gathering twilight parted from the shore. The lights of the city faded away, and the waves, which we severed, striving to compensate for the increasing darkness, by a superb display of phosphorescent light. A few moments of confusion, and we were ushered on to the deck, and into the saloon of what appeared to us a floating palace—so superior was it to the steamer we had just left at Aspinwall. Our voyage from Panama to San Francisco was the very poetry of sea life. Our accommodations were luxurious. The Pacific was as tranquil and blue as a summer lake, and our course was so frequently near the shore that the cloudy summits of mountains were in full view, and sometimes the life and vegetation of the coast discernable. The sunsets were covered with all the tints we had been taught to look for on the Pacific, and the nights warm and illuminated by stars, the brilliancy of which we had never seen equalled even on winter nights at home. The voyage was broken by a visit of a few hours to the Mexican town of Acapulco. We remained in port, on the steamer, till the coolness of the evening approached, and then, entering a small boat, we rowed to the shore, through waves colored with sunset hues, and having before us groves of palms sharply outlined against the golden evening sky. After twenty-five days of sea life we reached San Francisco, entering the Golden Gate in the dusk of evening, and shortly afterwards we were comfortably established in the Occidental Hotel, where we found every comfort and luxury that our own metropolis could have afforded. We remained in San Francisco until the 14th of October, when we embarked on the "Tanjore," a new ship of two thousand tons, on her first voyage from Boston to Hong Kong. We were her only cabin passengers. But she carried four hundred Chinese, of whom only four were women, returning with the bones of their kindred, neatly packed in square boxes, and the accumulations of their residence in California, to their native land. The ship lay some distance down the stream, and as the boat in which we were approaching her neared the side, showers of red and gold papers fell upon our heads, let fall by the Chinese, as we were afterwards told, to appease their gods, and secure themselves from any harm which might arise from the presence of unbelievers on the long voyage to their homes. Our manner of reaching the deck of the "Tanjore," was as novel to us as it was disagreeable. An arm chair was lowered to our boat, and despite the rising and falling of the waves, we were, one after the other, made secure in it, covered with the flag of our country, and amid the supreme shouts of the Chinese, hoisted up on to the deck, most thankful to find ourselves unhurt, with a firm plank beneath us. In the dusk of evening we set sail, and through a gathering fog we left the harbor. Our feelings were not of the most cheerful. The voyage was to be a long one, how long we could not tell, and our track lay over the lonely Pacific. We were surrounded by foreigners, who out-numbered us immensely, and who, to say the least, did not regard us with favorable eyes. But experience proved that what we had so often been told, was true, that the safest passengers to carry, in such numbers, are Chinese, on a return voyage to their homes, as each one has interests of his own to protect, and consequently keeps jealous watch of all others. The first break in the monotony of our voyage was the approach to the Sandwich Islands. We had hoped to land at one of the ports, but circumstances induced the Captain to alter the proposed plan of the voyage, which alteration came very near being most serious to us. The crew, which had been engaged with this understanding, became restive at the change, and when it was made known to them that we were to continue on our course, a mutiny was threatened. We, ladies, were on deck one evening, when, suddenly, a pistol shot startled us, and a noise of hurrying footsteps terrified us so, that we hastened to the cabin below. We had been standing on the upper deck, looking at the outlines of the islands, when these disturbing sounds occurred. Directly afterwards the Captain locked us below, and then we became aware of a serious struggle on deck. Reports of fire-arms, shouts and oaths were heard. The noise increased in the most alarming and unaccountable manner; shouts, and shrieks and heavy blows. The time dragged slowly by, while we sat trembling below, fearing the worst, and not knowing but that, at any moment, our main dependence, Mr. Burrows, might be injured. It may have been an hour, and, perhaps, longer, when Mr. Burrows appeared, telling us that the danger was past, although two of the sailors had been wounded by the pistol shots, and others bruised by the blows of the Chinese. Happily, these latter sided with the Captain, and falling upon the sailors, so belabored them, that but for the Captain's authority, not a sailor would have survived to work the ship into port. The sight of two of the ring-leaders, in chains, on the deck, kept us in mind of the peril we had encountered for some days, and we did not regain our feeling of security for a long time after the commotion occurred. Our voyage to the Sandwich Islands had consumed seventeen days, and for thirty-one days after losing sight of them our voyage dragged monotonously on. The weather was extremely fine, but for several days we were becalmed in mid-ocean, not a sail in sight, nor a living thing, save the sea birds and shoals of porpoises, which hovered and sailed about our floating home. The loneliness of this voyage was its leading characteristic, and day followed day, and we made little or no progress, and saw no evidence of the world beyond. We almost fancied ourselves in an enchanted ship on a magic ocean, to which there was to be no further shore. But on the forty-eighth day after our departure from San Francisco, we came in sight of the great white rock, called Rocha Blanca, which is the first land to greet the eyes of the weary voyager; and, as if by magic, we found ourselves in the midst of curious looking boats with mat sails, the construction of which was very novel to our eyes. At length, on the evening of the last day of November, we entered the harbor of Hong Kong, by the Lycemoon pass, and anchored in quiet waters. Lights gleamed from the shore, and the baying of the dogs, and cocks crowing, were the pleasantest sounds that had greeted our ears for many a day. Our arrival had been at midnight, so that it was not till the following morning that the fair city of Victoria, with its surrounding hills, burst upon our eyes. There, standing on the "Tanjore's" deck, we caught sight of Mary's magnificent home, with its noble proportions, and high tower, lifting itself above the rich growth of trees which enclose it. We had but a short time to wait before we saw a boat approaching us, and soon Mrs. Ogden Burrows recognized her brother, and I my brother-in-law. A few hurried greetings, and we were lowered over the ship's side in a chair, and safely deposited in a fine boat, with cushions and awnings, then flying over the waters as fast as eight stout oarsmen could pull us, we reached the landing in an incredibly short space of time, and once more touched dry land. There we found sedan chairs and bearers awaiting us, and entering these, we were swiftly borne, amid strange costumes, and new sounds, under a brilliant sun, up a hill to the gate of the Burrows' mansion. This flew open, and ascending a graveled path, bordered with rose trees, and gigantic Japonica shrubs in full bloom, we came to a broad, high flight of quaint steps, on either side of which were stands of fragrant plants, and at the top of these were wide verandahs, almost hidden behind the vases of flowers. The house appeared to be like a palace, as we stood in the wide polished hall, receiving the warmest greetings from those who had been watching for our coming. We were conducted up a fine staircase by Chinese servants, in the livery which is worn in all private houses, to our rooms, which, after our confined sea quarters, looked quite large enough to contain an ordinary sized house. Attached to each of these were back rooms, furnished with every requisite for bathing, which one appreciated, perhaps, more highly than all the other comforts with which we were surrounded, as a bath-room had not been included in the "Tanjore's" accommodations. Opening the long French windows, we stepped out on the marble-paved verandahs, wide enough for four to walk abreast, and looked out upon the harbor, and the far away hills and ships, and crowds of boats, all shining beneath the beams of the morning sun. We were silent, through happiness at this culmination of all our hopes, to which we had been looking forward during our weary voyage, and also, perhaps, through excess of admiration, for though not unaccustomed to scenes of beauty, our eyes had never rested on anything more lovely than the harbor of Hong Kong. The atmosphere was as balmy as a June day, and the coloring of sea and sky like the soft hues of a crayon picture. The three months that I spent in Hong Kong were among the most agreeable of my life. They seemed to me like one long holiday, of which pleasure was the natural atmosphere. Hong Kong is a little world within itself, cut off, as it then was, from communication with the great world beyond, save at stated periods of a fortnight, when the steamers brought news from Europe and America. The inhabitants were dependent on one another for enjoyment and amusement. And as all acknowledged this dependence, the community was hospitable in the highest degree. Balls, dinners, open air fetes followed each other in such quick succession, that one occasion of the kind was only a signal for another, so that the time fled away on brightest wings. To make the enjoyment of such pleasures quite perfect, one had a climate which, during the winter months, is as soft as that of Italy, but more agreeable, and rarely, from October to March, broken by a shower. Sunshine and flowers are common blessings, and after a succession of our inclement New England winters, it seemed to me like a new birth into a fairer world. The deep blue of the sky and sea, the soft tints of red, and grey and purple, which covered the hills as they receded into the distance, recalled some of the loveliest of Italian days and scenes. And yet, even Naples, can hardly rival the combination of these charms, which make Hong Kong, in winter, one of the most agreeable places in the world.

On the second of January we were enabled to carry out a plan we had formed to visit Canton, and we accordingly left Hong Kong, by steamer, for the Portuguese Island of Macao, a favorite Summer resort for the inhabitants of the larger cities. As there are no good hotels, visitors always take the bungalow of some friend, and ours happened to be a particularly comfortable one on the sea shore, having only a garden between it and the beach. The rose trees which surrounded it were in full bloom. Orange trees drooped with ripened fruit, and June breezes recalled to us many a happy day and lovely scene in Italy. We took our servants with us from Hong Kong; my sister's Chinese maid, or Amab, and three men servants. We had written to a friend to have a cook in the house, and we found awaiting us a sumptuous supper, sent in by a friend of Mr. Burrows. We spent three days on the island, which were full of incident and unalloyed enjoyment. While we were there the entire town was illuminated, in honor of the birth of the Portuguese Prince Royal. We had seen Naples and Paris illuminated; but this, though on a miniature scale, was really beautiful. Macao, like Naples, curves around a bay, and, standing at a certain point, we could see the town, like a sparkling girdle reflected in the water. We were on our way to a dinner, given us by friends, and were carried from one point of observation to another, with uncovered heads, needing no protection against the balmy atmosphere of the night. There are two or three objects of interest in Macao; but, perhaps, the most prominent is the ruined church, more than five hundred years old; nothing but the front is standing, all the rest having, long since, gone to decay, but the facade rises as complete as when first erected, and the carved saints and images of the Virgin gaze as placidly and serenely downwards as if the mass of ages was not fast obliterating their features, or the rank vegetation veiling their faces from the beholder's eyes. You reach the ruined church by an immense flight of steps, worn and broken by the feet of dead generations, and the heavier foot of time. You mount these steps as if to enter a grand cathedral, but no sound of organ, or voice of priest, echoes on the soft air; no cloud of incense rises on the balmy breeze. Your hand is on the portal; no grand cathedral meets your eye. You gaze through into vacancy, for the aisles are green with moss and vine, and the dome is the blue vault of heaven. In Europe I have seen many a ruin rich with legend, and grand in its decay, but never anything that impressed me more strongly than the front of this church, rising perfect and unbroken. The entrance, as it were, to beauty and cloistered quiet, and, yet a simple wall between us and green earth beyond. The gardens, made famous by the Portuguese poet, Camoens, are charming, in their way, but I fancy that but few would visit them, except to see the cave where so many years of his exile were spent. We, however, passed a morning there, taking the gardens in our tour of sight-seeing, and having gained a store of pleasant memories connected with this delightful little island, we left Macao, on the fifth of January, in the steamer for Canton. The voyage, of ten hours, was monotonous, but relieved by the sight of the barrier forts, reduced by the American fleet, and numerous Pagodas, the first that I had seen. The insignificance of the forts surprised me, and it was difficult to suppose that they ever could have been, in the slightest degree, formidable. There was one source of interest derived from the past, which threw a strange charm over the river and its shores. In childhood we had been entertained, time after time, by accounts of our grandfather's visit to Canton, and his passage up the Canton river; and as we passed along, these stories came back to me, and I could, with difficulty, realize that I was looking upon the very scene, unchanged, that he had told us of years before, and which, to our childish ears, seemed like a tale of another world, than this which we inhabit. We arrived at Canton about five in the afternoon, and then such a scene greeted our eyes, and such a Babel of voices assailed our ears, as I had never before seen or heard, for hundreds of boats crowded about the steamer eager for passengers. There were shouts of the men, the shriller cries of women, and the screams of the babies which the Chinese women carry strapped upon their backs, as they row their boats. There are more than fifty thousand boats on the Canton river, each boat being the home of a family. There they are born, and there they die. I was told by an old resident of Canton that thousands of these Chinese had never set foot on land, never quitting their boats from life's beginning to its end. This is difficult to realize, when you consider that the river is so narrow that you can see across it; but these boats are the homes of the people, and in some of the larger ones the masts and rudder are heir-looms in a family, descending from one generation to another. One can conceive of the swarms of human life on this river, when one is told that, in the fearful typhoon of 1862, twenty thousand boats were destroyed, and forty thousand dead bodies are said to have been picked up on the banks. There are entire streets of boats moored to the shore, and the passage from one to another is rendered easy by a plank. There are names for the various kinds of floating homes—Jampans for the poorest description, and Flower boats, or floating saloons, which are richly carved and gilded, and adorned with satin curtains, chandeliers and couches. But all have, in common, the two great eyes on the bow, for the Chinamen, in their strange attempt at our language, say, "suppose no got eyes, how can see? Suppose no can see, how can walkey?" The streets of the city are so narrow that the out-stretched hands can almost touch the opposite sides, which consist of long lines of little shops, having before their doors narrow strips of board, painted scarlet, decorated with golden letters. Within these shops is every conceivable article of Chinese manufacture, and swarms of human beings. As we passed through them, in our sedan chairs, on the seventh of January, the sights were most novel to us, and, apparently, we afforded subjects of no less interesting observation to the throngs of Chinamen, for it was with difficulty that the mounted servants freed a passage for our sedan chairs. There was a continuous shout from our bearers, and a prolonged answer from the crowds we passed through. The noise added to the confusion which reigned around us, and what we saw passed by us like a dream. I have a vague recollection of streets devoted to butcher shops, where dried rats, cats and dogs were exposed for sale, and of an all-pervading unwholesome odor. Then came huge temples, and rows of idols, sitting on gigantic lotus flowers symbolic of repose and godlike serenity, from which arose clouds of sickening perfume. Upon the steps of every temple as we alighted from our chairs there was a crowd waiting to receive us. The women pushed close upon us to examine our dresses, and the men howled, and seemed infinitely amazed, for foreign ladies are a novelty in Canton. In one temple we saw five hundred gods, the five hundredth of which was the image of an English sailor, a cigar in his mouth, and from the worship paid him, we fancied him to be a great favorite. Our home, while in Canton, was in the house belonging to Oliphant & Co., and we were most hospitably entertained by the gentlemen resident there. Our days were passed in excursions to gardens and palaces of interest, up and down the river, and the day before our departure, we spent an hour with Mr. and Mrs. Bonny, American Missionaries, who had devoted many years to teaching Chinese children, of whom they had a great number living in their house.

On the first of March, 1864, Mr. Silas E. Burrows, Jr., my brother-in-law, my sister Mary and myself, left Hong Kong in the steam-ship "Emma," on our way to our native land. We had a rough run of five days to Singapore. The day before reaching there we were sailing along the Malayan coast, and saw distinctly the surf, dashing white and silvery on the shores of Sumatra. We reached Singapore at night, and for hours before coming to anchor the air was laden with the perfume of flowers and aromatic plants. The following morning we went on shore, where we remained a day and a half. The weather was intensely warm, the temperature varying but little during the entire year, as Singapore is but about two degrees north of the Equator. The vegetation is extremely luxuriant—the palm, banyan, banana, pine apple, and bread-fruit trees growing in profusion. As we touched the shore we were instantly surrounded by a crowd of natives, whose brilliant turbans and gorgeous, though scanty, attire, shown in fine contrast to their ebony skins. There is little to be seen at Singapore; some pretty gardens, where flowers of every description flourish in exceeding richness and beauty, and three or four charmingly situated bungalows, homes of English residents; but one does not weary of watching the swarms of natives, and finds an unfailling fund of amusement in their dress, manners and gestures. We sat in the window of our hotel, looking out at the jugglers and tumblers, who crowded about, hoping to pick up a few pence, laughing heartily at their often surprising tricks. As we lounged thus indolently on the couches, fanning ourselves, black men, in their bright turbans and gaudy disposed robes, came and sat cross-legged before us, displaying jewels, silks and muslins to tempt us to buy. We shook our heads, and they quietly packed up their goods, and, with a respectful salutation, silently withdrew. At Singapore I tasted of two new kinds of fruit: one of them, the mangostun, it is said, is the most delicious in the world. It is round, like an apple, of a dark brown color, the rind being hard, like the outer green covering of the walnut. Within this is a fruit of a whiteness like snow. It is divided into six parts, like the divisions of an orange, and tastes not unlike snow-ice, flavored with lemon; the other is the champootane, resembling in color the brilliant berries which grow upon the Estrelle mountains in Southern France. They are of all shades of red, having on the rind pointed burs like a chestnut; within is a white ball, pleasantly acid and refreshing.

We left Singapore on the 8th of March, passing through the Straits of Malacca, on our way to the island of Penang, where we arrived on the 11th, and landing, spent there the greater part of one day. This island is said to be one of the most beautiful in the world, and for some time before we came to anchor we descried its soft green undulations, and breathed an air made sweet by its groves of spice trees and million flowers. As the steamer came to anchor some distance from the landing, we rowed to the shore in the captain's boat. There we found any number of Garces—the conveyance of the country—long hearse-like looking boxes on wheels, drawn by diminutive but powerful ponies, the driver never mounting the box, but keeping up with the ponies, speed be what it may. We selected one of the best of these carriages, and started on our drive through the island to a waterfall for which Penang is celebrated. I can readily understand why this island has acquired such a reputation for beauty. Groves of palms rise tall and majestic on every side; trees are entwined with vines of gorgeous colors, and the air is heavy with sweetness that is almost overpowering. We walked for quite a distance through groves of nutmeg trees, and as we passed under their overhanging branches, plucked the fruit, stripping off its outer husk and eating the rind-like mace with which the nutmeg is surrounded. The close of this memorable day found us again on board of the "Emen," entering the Bay of Bengal, on our way to Point-de-Galle, on the island of Ceylon. Our passage through the Bay of Bengal was almost insufferable from the heat, the thermometer ranging from eighty to ninety on the deck and beneath double awnings kept constantly wet. There are no European seamen on this route, the heat being too intense for them, as the thermometer in the engine room frequently reaches an hundred and twenty degrees. The sailors are Lascars, natives of India, and form a most picturesque body of men, their scarlet and yellow turbans showing in strong contrast to their dark skins.

We reached Point-de-Galle on the 15th, remaining there five days. We landed in the morning, and passed under a massive gateway into the town. Here we had to run the gauntlet through crowds of natives, who, in the gaudiest and scantiest of costumes, pressed upon us, offering for sale tortoise shell articles, lace, and gay paroquets, whose discordant cries almost distracted us. We elbowed our way through these obstacles up a long street to the hotel, where we found something like quiet and English comfort. Point-de-Galle is certainly a very attractive place to the lover of tropical scenery and vegetation. Groves of palm trees rise tall and dark against the hot cloudless sky, here and there a plume like leaf inclined against the deep blue, telling of what the mass of green is composed. For miles there is a drive along the shore, dashed by the waves of the Indian Ocean, on one side, and shaded by a dense line of palms on the other. During our stay the weather was extremely hot, and I have never experienced anything like the intensity of the sun beating up from the roads like the blast of a furnace. Every morning, by five o'clock, we were on the ramparts to catch the cool morning breeze, and night fall found us there again on the grass sloping down to the sea wall, watching the dash of the waves as they came thundering along to break into foam wreaths on the rocks beneath us. We left Ceylon on the 20th, on the steamer "Candia," whose arrival from Bombay we had been awaiting. The first two days out from port were unbearably hot, and the only way in which we could remain in any comfort below for a sufficient time to procure our meals, was to sit beneath the "pankahs" suspended above our heads, and which two stout Nubians pulled, thus creating a faint current of air.

On the 27th we reached Aden, at the entrance of the Red Sea, a desolate barren ledge of rocks connected with the main land of Arabia. The heat was so intense that we contented ourselves by looking at the shore from the steamer's deck. The natives came out to us in boats, and were certainly the most terrible looking specimens of humanity I had ever encountered. They dye their woolly hair a fierce red color, and pile it up and pull it out in a manner which renders their heads a gigantic size, contrasting strangely with their dark skins. The day following our arrival at Aden, we were again en route, and passing through the narrow straits of Bab el Mandel, entered the Red Sea, and on the 2d of April reached Suez, after an extremely hot and uncomfortable passage. We remained two days at Suez, which is a little more than a portion rescued from the wilderness. It is situated on the confines of the Arabian and Egyptian deserts, and is the rendezvous of the merchants of both nations. During our visit we went up to see the excavations for the Suez canal. We were towed by camels up the fresh water canal in a boat, comfortably cushioned and protected by awnings. The camels, bearing Arab drivers, kept along at a brisk trot, and the motion of the boat was rapid and agreeable. We were two hours ascending the fresh water canal, when we left our boat and walked half a mile, to the scene of the excavation, where there were hundreds of Arabs at work. I had always supposed that the desert was composed of loose drifting sand, and I had often heard it said that the experiment of the canal was altogether impracticable, on account of the sand blowing in as quickly as it was taken out. My surprise, therefore, was great when I saw the laborers toiling with pickaxe and crowbar to loosen the marl, and beheld each side of the excavation rise apparently as hard and solid as stone. The fragments which we picked up were some of them composed of crystals and a substance like sun dried mud, others of pieces of sea shells and pebbles, giving one the idea that the ocean must at one time have swept over what is now a region of drought and desolation. The fresh water canal is a blessing to Suez, as formerly all the water was brought on the backs of camels, in skins, a distance of ninety miles, and it is now abundant and very good when filtered.

On Tuesday, the 5th, we left Suez, in the railway train for Cairo. The time usually allowed for the journey is six hours, but we were twenty-one in crossing the desert. We remained nine hours in one spot, fifteen trains before us, and five behind, and none but Arabs and incompetent Italian officials to extricate us. Our delay was caused by the crowding of trains, filled with pilgrims on their way to Mecca, and when morning broke we found some consolation for our delay, in looking at the picturesque throngs of men and women, who, like ourselves, were waiting to continue their journey. At last, when we were almost exhausted from hunger and fatigue, the great Pyramids loomed in sight, then the Mosques and Minarets of Grand Cairo, and gardens, most refreshingly green, to our eyes, after the desert sands. A delay of an hour, from the throng in the station, seemed the culmination of all our woes, after which we escaped from the train, too tired to be glad. We spent five days in Cairo, visiting all that was of interest which our limited time permitted; made an excursion to the Pyramids, saw the Sphynx, and returned to the city, which was rendered most uncomfortable by the sirocco. This wind continued to blow with such unparalleled violence that we suddenly made up our minds to quit the land of Egypt, and turn our faces towards Spain. Accordingly, we left Cairo for Alexandria, by railway train, and found one of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamships lying in port, but about to start on her homeward voyage. We were fortunate to find accommodations on her, and sailed on the 11th for Malta and Gibraltar. The 15th we spent at Malta, where I renewed my impressions of the city of Valetta and its surroundings, of which I had derived so many pleasant ones from my visit in January, 1859.

On the morning of the 19th we reached Gibraltar, and left the "Ellora" to begin a tour through Spain, which was, in every way, so delightful, that the recollection of it is the brightest of all my experiences of foreign travel. We remained two days at Gibraltar, visiting its many points of interest, and then took the steamer for Cadiz; had a most agreeable passage through the Straits. We spent a week in Cadiz, and then journeyed by railway to Seville, where five days proved quite insufficient for us to see all that was of interest. There is a charm over these Spanish cities, which arises from their close connection with the history of the Moors, relics of whom one is constantly encountering in almost every remarkable building and street of the older cities of Spain. From Seville we returned to Cadiz, and took the steamer for Malaga, from whence, after a day, we started by diligence for Granada. We remained nearly two weeks in that city, spending most of our time in an inn, within the grounds which surrounded the ruins of the Alhambra.

Of all my souvenirs of foreign travel, this of my visit to Granada is the most satisfying. The usual disappointment, which seems inseparable from a first sight of famous places, was not experienced here. All that we saw of scenery and historical remains, gave us the most entire satisfaction and pleasure, far exceeding our brightest anticipations. The season was the best for a visit to Spain. Nature spread around us the freshest beauties of the year, and our vivid recollections of the history, poetry and romance which make Spain so attractive, and which threw over Granada such a charm, enabled us to enjoy all that we saw to the fullest extent. Most reluctantly we left this poetic region, and again started on our journey by diligence, traversing the famous province of La Mancha en route for Madrid. We found our stay in the Spanish capital all that we had hoped for, and left Madrid at the end of May for Paris. On our way thither we visited Burgos and passed two pleasant days at St. Sebastian, a Spanish watering place on the Bay of Biscay. From thence we journeyed to Bayonne, and remained there for a sufficient length of time to enable us to spend some hours at Biaritz. On our way once more, we made a short stay at Bordeaux and another at Tours, arriving at Paris early in June.

We spent the remainder of that month and a part of July in the French metropolis, then crossed the Channel to Southampton, where we found much enjoyment in the society of English friends, and in making excursions to the Isle of Wight and the interesting places in the environs. At the end of July we sailed from Southampton in the steamer "Bremen," for New York, where we arrived after a fifteen days' passage, during which we encountered several magnificent icebergs off Cape Race. I had been absent a little more than eleven months, and during that time had journeyed around the world, having attained, in fullest measure, the object for which I left home, and my sister saw once more her native land after an absence of six years.

Third visit to Europe.

My third visit to Europe was made in the winter of 1867. The last of November I sailed from New York in the steamer "St. Laurent," with my husband and two of my sisters, Henrietta and Jane. We landed at Havre, and visited, once more, the delightful old city of Rouen, on our way to Paris. We remained at Paris till the beginning of the new year, 1868, and then, having made our plans for the winter, journeyed southward to Marseilles, stopping at Dijon, Lyons and Avignon. At Marseilles we embarked on a French steamer, and in the captain I recognized the commander of the steamer in which we sailed from Constantinople to Smyrna, in January, 1859. After a cold and stormy passage, we arrived at Civita Vecchia early in January, and journeyed thence by railway to Rome, where we remained two months. Our stay there was delightful in the highest degree, renewing, as it did, so many recollections of bygone days, and of friends, some of whom we should never meet again. Just before quitting Rome for Naples, we were presented to Pope Pius IX., at the Vatican. We were very glad of this opportunity of an interview with a Pontiff who will occupy so prominent a place in the history of Italy and the Roman Catholic world. We spent the month of March at Naples and its surroundings, reaching there by railway, an innovation upon the slow but most agreeable mode of travel which had been the rule during our former visit to Italy. Early in April we returned to Rome, and journeyed thence, by railway, to Florence, where we remained a fortnight. From Florence we visited Pisa, and at Spezzia took a carriage, and renewing our former delightful recollections of Italian journeyings by this slow means, reached Genoa, where we were detained by illness for three weeks. It was a singular coincidence that on our visit to Genoa, in 1858, we had been detained there for a similar cause, and that we again employed the same physician who had been of such service to us at that time. Early in May we left Genoa, taking the train for Turin, and again crossing Mont Cenis, by carriage, from Suza, though under circumstances quite different from those which made our passage in 1859 remarkable. Remaining at Chambéry for a sufficient time to gain needful repose, we took the train for Paris, breaking the long journey by a night at Macon.

Reaching Paris in the pleasantest season in which one can see the French capital, we remained there till the close of the first week in June, and then once more embarking on the "St. Laurent," reached New York, after a passage of eleven days.

NOTE L.

WILL OF JAMES TROWBRIDGE. (Vile Fairfield Probate Records.)

In the name of God. Amen. Ye 29th day of April, 1732. I, James Trowbridge, of Wilton Parish, in Norwalk, County of Fairfield, Colony of Connecticut, being very sick and weak in body, but of perfect mind and memory, thanks be given unto God; therefore, calling into mind the mortality of my body, and knowing that it is appointed unto man once to die, do make and ordain this, my last Will and Testament, that is to say, principally and first of all, I give and recommend my soul into the hands of God, that gave it, and my body I recommend to the earth, to be buried in decent Christian burial, at the discretion of my executors, nothing doubting but at the general resurrection, I shall receive again the same, by the mighty power of God; and as touching such worldly estate wherewith it had pleased God to bless me in this life, I give, devise and dispose in the following manner and form, that is to say, after my just debts and funeral charges are well satisfied and paid:

Imprimis, I give and bequeath unto Mary, my dearly beloved wife, the improvement of one-half of my dwelling house, and one-third part of my lands, during the time of her natural life, and to have the half of the said house which she shall make choice of, to dwell in as aforesaid. Also, I give to my said wife all my movable estate remaining after my debts are paid, to be to her, and to her dispose.

Item.—I give to my grandson, James Trowbridge, of New Haven, the sum of five shillings.

Item.—I give to my son, Isaac Trowbridge, besides what I have heretofore given him, the sum of forty shillings.

Item.—I give to my daughter, Esther Leavenworth, besides what I have already given her, the sum of three pounds.

Item.—I give to my daughter, Mary Brown, besides what I have already given to her, the sum of forty shillings.

Item.—I give to my daughter, Elizabeth St. John, the sum of forty shillings.

Item.—I give to my son, Daniel Trowbridge, besides what I have already given him, ye sum of ten shillings.

Item.—I give to my son, Caleb Trowbridge, besides what I have already given him, the sum of ten shillings.

Item.—I give to my daughter, Abigail Green, besides what I have already given to her, the sum of twenty pounds.

Item.—I give to my daughter, Lydia Trowbridge, ye sum of thirty pounds.

TROWBRIDGE FAMILY.

Item.—I give to my daughter, Sarah Trowbridge, the sum of thirty pounds.

Item.—I give to my son, John Trowbridge, and to his heirs and assigns forever, ye one-half of my dwelling house, and two-thirds part of all my land, and at and upon my wife's decease, ye remainder of my house and land belonging to me; he, my said son, John Trowbridge, paying in first half my debts, and then all ye above legacies above mentioned and by me made within the term of one year after my decease, excepting to my two youngest daughters, to be paid them, as they come to age in the law, or arriving to a married state before. Lastly, I make and ordain my above said wife, Mary, and my son, John Trowbridge, executors of this, my last Will and Testament; and I do here utterly disallow, revoke and disannul all and every other former testaments, wills, legacies and bequests, and executors by me in any way before named, written and bequeathed, ratifying this, and no other, to be my last Will and Testament.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal ye day and year above written. Signed, sealed, published and pronounced and declared by ye said James Trowbridge, as his last Will and Testament, in ye presence of John Stuart.

JAMES TROWBRIDGE.

SAMUEL STUART, JR.

Probated July 5, 1792.

Family Reunion.

SEPTEMBER, 1866.

[From the Detroit Advertiser and Tribune.]

Family Reunion.

SEPTEMBER, 1866.

IN this busy world, especially in the American part of it, where the masses are toiling and struggling to excel in life's race, to heap up riches, to gain honors, or at least notoriety, and where self-love and self-interest too often stifle all generous emotions, and steel the heart against all holy impulses, it is worthy of notice, whenever anything occurs in the way of impedimenta to this pressing throng—more worthy of note if such obstacle be found in an effort on the part of the actors in the great drama to lay aside their parts and be the boys and girls they were in former days.

It was our happy lot to be present a few days ago at a family reunion, such as is rarely witnessed in our own or any other country.

Nearly fifty years ago, when Michigan was a lonely wilderness, when the buffalo had then recently taken its departure for the western prairies, when there was no road from the Lakes to the Mississippi, except the trail of the Indian, when the "oak openings" were beautiful to the eye of the traveler and gave promise of that rich cultivation which has since been so fully realized—there came from the then thinly populated region of the Susquehanna a young farmer of twenty-seven, with his family, of mother, wife and four little ones, to try his fortune in the new country of Michigan. They availed themselves of a previous reconnoissance by the pater familias and selected for their home a pretty spot in Oakland county, where the natives had made a small clearing of thirty acres, which had grown up to poplar brush. The farmer saw that the soil was a rich black loam, that the clearing would be easy, and that a pretty stream ran through the land, and an iron impregnated spring graced the slope of a hillside. There was already a log house, fourteen feet square, erected by a squatter, who gladly availed himself of the opportunity to sell his "betterments," lest some unscrupulous emigrant should buy the title from the United States and oust him without compensation.

Some people do not believe in particular Providence. Alas! Many do not believe in any Providence. With the cheering words of the Savior continually sounding in their ears: "Behold the lilies of the field," and "See ye the young ravens," they heed not the blessed sound, but dash on, reckless of the present or the future, resigning themselves to what they call Fate. Not so our young emigrant. From a child his mother had taught him, as Timothy was taught, and with the docility of Timothy he received and treasured up the heavenly doctrines of the holy scriptures. He came to his log cabin, and there he erected a family altar, upon which he offered day by day, during the vicissitudes of a long life, the pure and holy sacrifice of a heart devoted to his Savior—

"Through all this track of years
Wearing the white flower of a blameless life."

Combining the docility of a child and the sympathy of a woman with a sober judgment, rare common sense, and a devotion to the right which no temptation, no allurements, no example, no threats, no promises could cause to swerve a hair's breadth from the true and the just, his counsel and his example bore their fruits in the character of his children. Seven sons and four daughters lived to call him blessed. Of these, one "is not." A daughter was long since called home by her Savior, leaving a little son who is now entering upon manhood. The fortunes of life, as they are called, scattered these children far and wide. One took upon him the yoke of Christ in the wide missionary field and went to his work in the far East, where he encountered all the hazards and cares of life among barbarous Turks for thirteen years. Another, after long devotion to his country's service in the army, had retired to the peaceful avocations of civil life, assuming a position of honor and responsibility, not less in magnitude than that he had resigned. Another, having "fought a good fight" in subduing the rebellion of his deluded countrymen, and received all his country could give in return, stars and thanks, pitched his tent in the midst of the people he had chastened in war, and, at their request, took up his abode with them in peace, to pursue his professional vocation as a lawyer. Two had tried the fitful ways of commerce, and had to a fair extent asserted their claim to its rewards, and received it. Another had been gradually led from the calm and even tenor of his way into the turbulent arena of politics, and being found faithful, had achieved the respectable and responsible position of representative in his country's halls of legislation. Lastly, the Benjamin of the household had staid at home to tend his father's flock, and to establish among his neighbors a character of purity and inflexible integrity, worth more than brass or monumental marble's story. These the boys. The girls, as girls must do, have had their vicissitudes. One expatriated herself and went among the heathen to carry the precious seed of gospel truth, but was driven back by sickness. Another has lived to see her own dear children ripening into womanhood and manhood, and the third is with the Benjamin, devoted to the care of the widowed mother.

All now, by previous accord, have come to the old roof tree, where, (some birdlings having left the nest before the others were hatched,) for the first time they all met together. The father had years ago been called to rest, but the mother and some collateral kindred, together with thirteen out of twenty-six grand children, were permitted to meet these seven sons and three daughters, upon whose excutcheon there rested not a blot, and around the auld hearth stone where all had been reared, to mingle their prayers and praises, and to recount the history of their varied lives.

“Old hopes, which long in dust have lain,
Old dreams come thronging back again,
And boyhood lives again in me.”

And what a precious mother was that, to whom this boon was granted! Looking back through the vista of the years numbered with the past, she recollected the time when in sunny youth she and her consort had entered into possession of their little domicile, whose one apartment served as drawing room, scullery, dining room and dormitory, surrounded by the one acre of rudely cultivated land, and no neighbor nearer than “Uncle Baldwin,” as they called the old pump maker, who had recently removed from Detroit to a quarter section about a mile distant; and connecting the little events of their then daily life, great events to them, she could remember how cheerfully and unrepiningly they bore the trials of their advent; how they left Detroit early in the morning, in a wagon drawn by a pair of young oxen and containing their household stuff, and all the household; how they made six miles in tolerable comfort, refreshed themselves at "Mammy Handsome's shanty" with a cup of tea, and then plunged into the swamps and cranberry marshes, which were such a terror to the emigrant, and how they floundered and tugged in these marshes till dark night overtook them, and they were almost in despair, when Miller and his friend Hoge of Detroit came along, took pity upon them, cheered their drooping spirits and assisted them to reach a small tavern at the Sandhill, about midnight, thus making eleven or twelve miles, with great effort, as their day's work; and how a similar struggle the next day brought them to their home.

She remembered, too, with profound gratitude to the giver of every good and perfect gift, how, although at times subjected, in common with her neighbors, to the difficulties in the way of providing food in the wilderness, her barrel of meal and her creuse of oil had always been cared for by one whose promise is sure to all who trust in him. And moreover, she humbly thanked God that he had put it in her heart, and in her husband's heart, to exercise the rites of hospitality without stint to all comers in that early day, thus enabling her to dispense favors, which, if they did not actually save life, as in some cases they probably did, did much to assuage the sufferings of the needy emigrant. And so, beginning with this chapter in the outset of their humble career, this pious widow could trace down, step by step, the vicissitudes of the long interval, watching over and praying for her little boys as they grew up to manhood, and endeavoring to bend their twig of life in a direction where she could call down the blessing of heaven upon them. And now, surrounded by all necessary material comforts, in the full enjoyment of communion with her Savior, she there received, at the old homestead, upon the spot where forty-five years before she had in trust and confidence begun her western life, her children and her children's children, who had come from different and distant climes to pay homage to her, as to one whose early and long continued care and affection had imposed an obligation never to be removed.

The father was not there to mingle with the happy group. That father who was always like a brother to his children, had been called to his rest, on the first day of March, 1859. Born at Albany, in the State of New York, on the fourth day of July, 1794, his father was Luther Trowbridge, a gentleman of education, who had studied law with his uncle, the Hon. Edmund Trowbridge, Judge of the King's Bench, Boston, Mass. In the trying times of '76 this Edmund Trowbridge remained "loyal," became a "tory," and closed his life in that category; but such was the purity of his personal character, as represented to the writer by Hon. Judge Gould, of Boston, an octogenarian in 1840, and in old times a personal friend of Judge Trowbridge, that he lived unmolested and died respected in Massachusetts. Luther differed from his uncle in politics, volunteered and took his musket at Lexington, was commissioned ensign in the Massachusetts line, rose to be a lieutenant, and at the peace of 1783 left the army a captain by brevet and quartermaster. He settled at Albany.

Stephen Van Rensselaer Trowbridge, his son, and the subject of our sketch, was so named out of respect to the Patroon, Stephen Van Rensselaer, who was a neighbor and friend of Luther Trowbridge. Stephen's mother was Elizabeth Tillman, daughter of Major John Tillman, who served with his son in law at the capture of Burgoyne. This John Tillman and his wife were Germans. They came over in the same ship and on the voyage fell in love and were married. So family tradition goes. Stephen's mother died at the house of her son Charles in Detroit in October, 1845, aged 84 years. His father died at Albany in February, 1802, leaving his widow with six children, and, as was common with revolutionary officers, he died poor.

Stephen's father had a warm friend in General Vincent Matthews, a lawyer, who had removed from the Hudson River to Elmira to try his fortune. He was much at Albany on public business, and when Stephen was eight years old, he adopted him, took him home and entered him as a law clerk. Subsequently the general took it into his head to become a merchant, and Stephen was his clerk. He also had some fields adjoining the village, and Stephen had a passion for farming. He soon learned to handle a cradle and a scythe with the best of them. At the age of eighteen, at the commencement of our late war with England, he joined a regiment of three months' cavalry volunteers, and served with it during the time of its enlistment on the Niagara frontier. This sort of education, though irregular and wrong in principle, proved to be of great service to Stephen. He knew enough of law to keep out of it, of accounts to state them handsomely and in a beautiful hand, which he retained till his death, and of farming to make himself independent of fraud in its practice. These qualities were invaluable in a new country, and accordingly Stephen was the recipient of the suffrages of his fellow citizens, as long as he would consent to hold office. He was one of the members of the first legislative council, a body composed of thirteen, under the old territorial government; and afterwards, when the territory threw off her swaddling clothes and became a State, he was returned both to the House of Representatives and the Senate. Meantime he was frequently employed by the general government in offices of responsibility and trust connected with the Indian department, which in those days was of great extent, including seven States and territories, and of great importance, having care of the disbursement of the treaty moneys paid for the extensive domain of Michigan and Wisconsin.

When the "copper fever" broke out on Lake Superior, the United States, the owner of the land, began by leasing the mines to companies who worked them and paid a royalty or proportion to the government. It became necessary for the United States to have a resident agent on Lake Superior, and Stephen was at one time the appointed agent. He spent two summers there, but the business took such a turn that his office became a sinecure, and he wrote from Sault Ste. Marie to the department, so describing it, and advising the department to abolish it. He resigned his position at the same time. This was to his intimate friends, who only knew of it, for he was no boaster, a source of some amusement, as being the only case in their knowledge where an incumbent recommended the abolition of his office, and then showed his sincerity by renouncing its emoluments; but it was also to them a source of pride that in him they had God's noblest work, an honest man. While our friend was thus occasionally occupied with the affairs of State, his main pursuit was that of a plain farmer. He worked industriously and lived frugally. He was a pattern of sobriety to all his neighbors, and his cheerfulness was so contagious that he enlivened every circle. He was always ready as a neighbor, with material aid, or as a counsellor, and frequently prepared the last wills of those about him with whom he was most intimate.

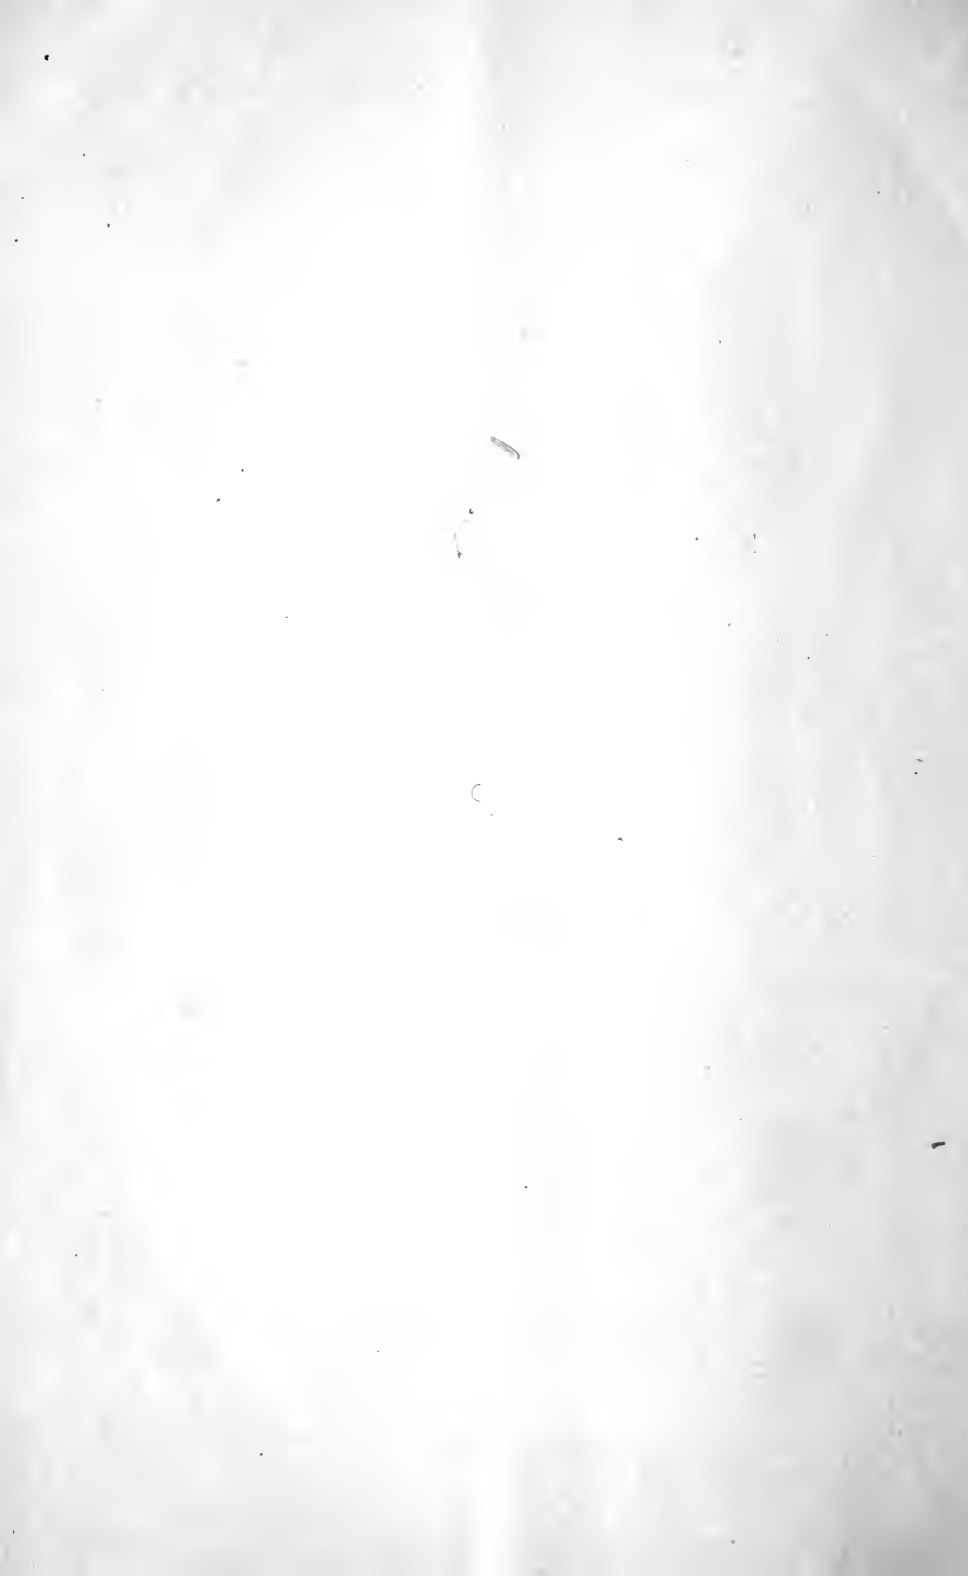

His character as a christian brings us upon ground of great delicacy. As there were Pauls and Barnabases, Peters and Johns and Jameses in apostolic days, evidencing the loveliness of the religion of Christ in all its phases, so in these days the diversity of gifts and temperaments, of education and association are so great, that it is questionable how far one christian is able to judge of another. But of this man all who knew him as a christian could unite in saying that they knew none more humble, more penitent, more truth loving, more kind, more forgiving, more generous, more true. His character was naturally very confiding, and although he had in his earlier years more quickness of temper than was good for him, none knew it better or lamented it more than himself. Grace was constantly at work, refining and purifying his soul, and when God called him he was an example of the patient christian, waiting for the summons. He became a member of the Presbyterian Church at Pontiac, in Oakland County, and was successively Deacon and Elder in the church at Troy and Birmingham up to the time of his death. His church, as a mark of affectionate respect to his memory, conferred the office of Elder, which he had held, upon his respected son, Guy Maxwell Trowbridge.

The manner of his death has often called forth remark. He and his friends Robert Stuart and General Henry Whiting had often conferred on the subject of death, and all were agreed that, if consistent with God's will, they would like to die suddenly. Gen. Whiting was first taken. He was at St. Louis, preparing to visit Detroit, and, while packing his trunk, fell dead. Mr. Stuart was at Chicago. He took cold, coughed in the night, rose from his bed and went to his chair, in which he died during the night. Mr. Trowbridge had been out in the morning to visit an old neighbor, came in about noon, laid down on the sofa with a book, as if to read, and in a few minutes was found in a fit of apoplexy, which in a few hours terminated his life.

“May we not think of thee, as wearing
That star-like crown of light, and bearing,
Amidst Heaven's white and blissful band,
The fadeless palm branch in thy hand;
And joining with a seraph's tongue
In that new song the elders sung,
Ascribing to the blessed Giver
Thanksgiving, love and praise forever!”
